D.C. Widower To Get Chair For Slaying Housekeeper

Jury Deliberates 90 Minutes to Return Verdict of Guilty In First Degree

By Winifred Nelson

Frederick C. Mergner, 45-year-old widower and father of five children, faces death in the District's electric chair.

He was found guilty of first-degree murder yesterday in the shooting of his housekeeper, Mrs. Charlotte Robinson, 30, who was left on a street corner to die after an attempt to stuff her body down a sewer failed.

The jury returned a verdict be-before Justice James Proctor in District Court after 90 minutes' deliberation.

The short, bald defendant received the verdict with his arms folded across the chest, and then stalked out of the courtroom in the same posture, a deputy United States marshal dogging his heels.

Mandatory Death Sentence

Asked if Mergner would appeal the case, his attorney, John H. Burnett, replied: "I guess he'll appeal. They never give up until the last horn blows."

A first-degree murder conviction carries a mandatory death sentence.

In closing arguments to the jury, Prosecutor John W. Fihelly called Mergner "a slab of marble . . . . . a brutal, fiendish, cold-blooded murderer."

His powerful voice fairly shook the jury box as he attacked Mergner's plea of insanity by reason of intoxication at the time of the crime.

"If drunkenness and insanity are one and the same thing, then all a person has to do in the District is get drunk before killing someone and a jury will let him go for insanity," Fihelly declared.

Amnesia Story Attacked

The Government attorney also discredited Mergner's claim of complete forgetfulness or "a liquor blackout" concerning events that tragic night of October 25 and pointed to the detailed account Mergner gave law officers after his arrest.

"Is there any amnesia there when he gives every detail of the killing—every bloody detail? Fihelly thundered. "So he's the man who had amnesia, the man who didn't forget to put a loaded revolver in his pocket for the woman he loved!"

The Government's contention of premeditated (first degree) murder was strengthened by testimony of Dr. Edgar Griffin, senior medical officer at St. Elizabeths Hospital who recently took the post of the slain Dr. John E. Lind.

The psychiatrist related: "I'd say Mergner was capable of premeditation by virtue of the fact he was able to figure out how to get the deceased on the telephone before the crime—that he was able to drive his car 8 miles across the city without a mishap, to meet her—and that he was able to reach the correct address."

Defense Attorney Burnett's manner of argument to the jury was in direct contrast to Fihelly's. He spoke calmly and quietly, so

Nats Split Bill With Yanks; Tied For Cellar Berth

Nw York, June 21 (AP).—The New York Yankees and Washington Senators divided a double-header today, the Yankees winning the opener, 4-3, and the Nats taking the nightcap, 6-4.

The New Yorkers came from behind to win the first. Trailing 3-1 in the seventh, Johny Lindell tripled in two runners to tie the score. A double by Oscar Grimes to start the eighth, and a triple by George Stirnweiss won the game for the world champions.

A five-run uprising by the Nats in the first inning sewed up the ball game in the nightcap. The Yankees rallied for a pair of runs in the first and fifth, but Washington came back with another in the eighth to clinch the game. Milo Candini held his former teammates to six hits to win his third game of the year.

Dewey Directing His 'Draft' By Telephone From Albany

Backstage Victory Won by Streamlined Foreign Policy Plank

By Robert C. Albright

Chicago, Ill., June 21.—A bloodless coup by GOP supporters of postwar world collaboration tonight appeared to have lifted the "New Mackinac" peace manifesto out of a damaging party fight and for that matter even out of the campaign.

A proposed streamlined plank, strikingly similar to the Administration's own foreign policy stand, won its first victory in back-stage maneuvering leading up to formal organization today of the platform-drafting Republican resolutions committee.

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), hitherto reported cool to a forward-looking subcommittee rewrite of the party's Mackinac charter, announced his approval of the plank, and a few hours later was unanimously elected chairman of the resolutions committee.

Senator Warren L. Austin (R., Vt.), advance agent at this convention for "another step forward" in

Governor Will Accept For Country and Party, His Manager Reports

By Edward T. Folliard

Chicago, June 21.—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, who has yet to throw his hat into the ring formally, appears to be directing the draft-Dewey campaign by long-distance telephone from Albany.

Herbert Brownell, manager of Dewey's two gubernatorial campaigns, let it slip out this afternoon that he has been in constant communication with the erstwhile racket-buster for the last two days—that is, ever since he, J. Russell Sprague and Edwin F. Jaeckle blew into town and announced that when the New York Governor is nominated for the Presidency he "will do his duty to country and party" and accept.

Thus, five days in advance of the Republican National Convention of 1944, Chicago is witnessing a striking parallel to what was happening when the Democrats met here in 1940. Then the long-distance wires led from the White House to the Blackstone Hotel, with President Roosevelt at one

Congress Faces 5 Major Bills Before Recess

OPA, 3 Appropriation Measures Dispatched To White House

By Mary Spargo

Clearing the decks for the convention recess, Congress yesterday completed action on legislation to extend wartime price and wage controls, and sent the compromise measure, together with three major appropriation bills and one or two minor items, to the White House.

Working against its usual deadline at the end of the fiscal year, Congress still has five major appropriation bills, including that for the District of Columbia, to act upon before adjournment.

Actions Yesterday Included:

1. By a vote of 189 to 169 the House rejected a proposal to commission WASPS as members of th eArmy Air Forces.

2. Both House and Senate adopted the conference report on the price control extension bill continuing price and wage laws and the Office of Price Administration for one year from June 30, the present expiration date. Prompt White House action is expected, since the compromise adopted is said to have Administration approval.

49 Billinos for War

3. Senate action on three appropriation measures supplying funds for the Interior, State, Justice and Commerce Departments, and for the civil functions of the War Department completed consideration of legislation which will give these agencies a total of nearly half a billion dollars for the next fiscal year. The Interior bill carries $103,239,796; civil functions, $92,455,440, principally for river and harbor and flood-control

Sedition Trial Outburst Lands Woman in Jail

Court Spectator Gets 10-Day Sentence On Contempt Charge

By James E. Chinn

A rotund, middle-aged woman with a pronounced Teutonic accent dramatically interrupted the mass sedition trial yesterday with a lone demonstration and less than an hour later she was en route to the District Jail to serve a 10-day sentence for contempt of court.

Picking one of the rarely quiet moments in the courtroom for her act, the woman arose from a seat in a section reserved for spectators, unfurled a banner and shouted: "Mr. Rogge (O. John Rogge, chief Federal prosecutor), here's a letter for you."

Deputy United States marshals seized her and the banner, too, as Chief Justice Edward C. Eicher simultaneously ordered her removal from the courtroom. As soon as Justice Eicher could adjourn court he conferred in his chambers with the woman and United States Attorney Edward M. Curran and decided to hold a special hearing forthwith.

Brought Before Court

The locked courtroom was reopened and Justice Eicher returned to the bench. The woman was brought in by a deputy marshal and faced the bar.

"What is your name?" inquired Justice Eicher.

"Mrs. Edith Turner," came the reply.

"Where do you live?" asked the court

"Newport News, Va." she answered, explaining that her husband was a lawyer.

"Previously the woman had told reporters her name was Mrs. Edith Bergere and that she came from

Doctors' Postwar Role

Berge Warns Medicine to Heed Veterans' Demand for Health

St. Louis, June 21 (AP).—Asserting that millions of returning war veterans "are going to demand for themselves and for their families the instruments of health to which they are entitled," Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General, said today a "new medical order" is inevitable.

He called upon physicians to hail the "new order" enthusiastically and to support it creatively.

"If doctors oppose, or stand on the sidelines, the layman will create a medical order which may prove to be indifferent or even blind to the values doctors prize most," Berge—in charge of the Justice Department's antitrust division—added in a speech prepared for the American Urological Association.

The choice is not between "private practice" and "socialized medicine," he asserted, adding that such an approach has led to "confusion and dogmatism." There are "myriads of schemes," he said, for bringing the doctor and patient together.

Although he declared he has no more fear of a venture of the state into medicine than into law, he does not think the Government necessarily must dominate or even take part in the new medical order.

"It may or may not be state medicine; it cannot escape being social medicine," he said.

Asserting that the organization of medicine has lagged far behind the technology of medicine, Berge suggested that organization might be effected through a non-profit corporation, a group of consumer cooperatives, or a mutual association of the profession and laity.

Yanks Hurl 2000 Planes At Berlin

43 Bombers and 15 Fighters Lost in Greatest Raid Yet On German Capital

London, June 21 (AP).—More than 1000 U. S. heavy bombers under fighter escort of equal size pounded Berlin with fire bombs and high explosives today in the greatest raid of the war on the German capital, losing 43 heavies and 15 fighters to heavy antiaircraft fire and the few enemy planes which rose to meet them.

The Berlin radio, without Allied confirmation, said part of this formidable striking force roared on eastward, possibly in the first shuttle raid from Britain to new U. S. bases in Russia. Inauguration of such a route would throw another strangling aerial noose around the beleaguered Reich.

As Berliners dug casualties from the smouldering rubble, the German radio called the raid a retaliatory blow for the jet-propelled bombs, which winged over southern England for the seventh straight day, and added: "But no matter whether bombs are being dropped on Berlin or not, the bombardment of London with the new weapon will continue."

Nazis Threaten Counteraction

German propagandists, admitting casualties and damage in the capital, threatened counteraction with "bigger and more powerful explosives."

It was considered likely the Flying Fortresses and Liberators, some of whose crews reported they did not see a single enemy fighter over Berlin, dropped more explosives on the capital in an hour than the Germans had been able to launch from their battered rocket ramps in seven days.

Throughout the day Allied airmen flew on countless missions over Normandy, pounding German transport and communications while other squadrons followed up heavy night blows at the rocket platforms.

One force of Liberators, escorted by Thunderbolts, pounded the platforms around Pas de Calais again in the evening and returned without loss.

Squadron after squadron of medium bomber streamed back and forth across the straits for three hours in the evening, apparently hammering away at these same targets.

Fighters Strafe Airdromes

Eighth Air Force fighters, some with little to do convoying the heavies to Berlin, strafed enemy airdromes and communications.

Most of the bombers dropped their cargoes through cloud cover. Only one or two groups saw any enemy planes and these were mainly two-engined JU-88's.

Thunderbolts, Mustangs and Lightnings swept in to attack about 50 of them and one pilot

U. S. Patrols Press Into Cherbourg

Thrust to Mile Of Waterfront; City's Fall Called Matter of Hours

Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Force (Thursday), June 22 (AP).—American infantry patrols probed into the southern fringes of Cherbourg yesterday, reaching points less than 1 mile from the waterfront as the main army massed an overpowering weight of men and metal on the surrounding ridges in preparation for the destruction of the Germans trapped in that vital Normandy seaport.

The midnight communique said "Allied forces made further progress in the battle for Cherbourg, and the area held by the enemy is steadily diminishing. Our advance up the entire peninsula has been rapid."

Fall of the port appeared to be but a matter of hours.

Yanks Find a Soft Spot

Reports to headquarters said the advancing Americans had found a soft spot along the Cherbourg inland road and railway that leads up from the south between the bristling forts du Roule and Octeville, and had penetrated to within 1500 yards of the Cherbourg waterfront."

Don Whitehead, Associated Press correspondent, in a dispatch wirelessed from the scene late tonight, reported American patrols stabbing forward, testing out enemy pillboxes, but said the main forces still were massing for the kill.

The German defenses on the southern rim of the city include blockhouses and mutually-supporting pillboxes capable of sharp crossfire, Whitehead wrote.

Street Battle Foreseen

The German opposition is stiffening, he said, a street-by-street battle for Cherbourg is predicted by civilian refugees.

A "Stalingrad" defense is unlikely, however, Whitehead said, because of the tremendous superiority of the Americans on land, at sea and in the air.

[In conflict with Whitehead's report, Henry T. Gorrell, United Press correspondent on the Cherbourg Front, quoted French refugees and prisoners as saying that the Germans have started to withdraw from Cherbourg to make their last stand on Cap de la Hague, which extends 15½ miles to the northwest of the peninsula. —Editor's note.]

The Germans, now back to their last-stand defenses, still show signs of the confusion which overtook them when the Americans sealed off the peninsula Sunday, and have given up considerable ground which American troops thought should have been defended.

German demolition squads labored with explosives and fire to try to wreck the great port facil-

Robot-Launching Platforms In Normandy Seized by Yanks

London (Thursday), June 22 (U.P.).—American troops hammering toward Cherbourg have captured several robot-launching platforms, tearing the last vestige of secrecy from Germany's new weapon, supreme headquarters announced today as giant RAF night bombers struck a crushing blow in the Calais area against one of the main supply centers for the flying bombs as a follow-up to terrific daylight air attacks.

Headquarters did not announce how many of the concrete launching platforms fell into American hands but front dispatches said at least 8 were taken, all intact. Allied technical experts began examining the platforms to learn the secrets of the German weapon.

Today was the first time it had been revealed that they were robot-launchers in the Cherbourg area.

The Cherbourg Peninsula is only 80 miles from the great British port of Southampton, but it was believed that the Allied invasion prevented the enemy from ever putting the pilotless-planes into use from Normandy.

The Germans also took advantage of the overcast to keep up a sporadic fire of the weird missiles against Britain. They caused damage and casualties.

The new assaults were made as Britain's defenses appeared to scored their greatest victory yet over the robots.

New waves of robots wheezed over Britain throughout the day but increasing numbers of them were being shot down by anti-aircraft fire and new RAF tempest fighters.

American Mustang fighter pilots at one base, who have shot down 12 robots, aid they could catch them easily. They estimated that the robots come in two sizes—2500 pounds and 250 pounds—and travel between 324 and 400 iles an hour.

Testifying to the rate at which the robots are being shot down, one south coast observer reported he saw at least 10 downed early this morning over the Channel or just over the coast. Another saw five out of seven begged within 25 minutes.

One report indicated that at least one robot "back-fired" on the Germans. A tempest pilot reported that his guns caused a robot to swing around, and it was last seen heading over the Channel toward the Calais coast.

Reds Hurl 2 Surprise Drives To Knock Finland Out of War

Helsinki Said to Hurry Plans for Armistice Action

Stockholm, June 21 (AP).—Face to face with military catastrophe, Finnish political leaders were reported tonight to be seeking to avert a Government crisis by a quick armistice with the Russians.

Although Finnish sources expressed fear of German countermeasures, particularly a possible attack on Helsinki by parachute troops, political spokesmen were quoted as saying: "Our position is so bad we must act very quickly in reaching an armistice with the Russians."

Of grave concern to the Finns, also, was the possibility that the Germans might set up a puppet government in northern Finland—accusing the Helsinki government of being traitors.

These fears were grounded on the fact that Germany has built up Finland in propaganda as its strongest ally, and should Finland withdraw from the war, the Nazis would have a problem in explaining the action to the home front and satellite nations.

The Swedish newspaper Aftonbladet Tuesday said the struggle between peace activists and the pro-German clique in Finland was nearing a climax.

Aftonbladet added that Field Marshal Baron Carl Gustav Mannerheim, Finnish commander in chief, and peace activists were having "difficulties," as the political-military crisis became more pronounced.

Russians Smash Lines, Press Ahead Toward Capital

London, June 21 (AP).—The Red Army launched two new surprise offensives today against Finland's tottering defenses, driving from the northeast and the southeast in an effort to knock the Finns out of the war, Moscow announced tonight.

Springing into action on the new fronts less than 24 hours after announcement of the fall of Viipuri, Finland's second largest city, Soviet troops struck north of Lake Onezhskoe (Onega) with a powerful thrust that broke through Finnish lines east of Medvezhegorsk and opened another drive along the Svir River between Lakes Onezhskoe and Ladoga.

Drive Along Railway

These offensives were along the Murmansk-Leningrad railway, which the Soviet high command apparently is bent upon clearing as soon as possible. The front at Medvezhegorsk is approximately 240 miles northeast of Viipuri and the one along the Svir is 150 to 200 miles due east of the captured Finnish port.

The broadcast Russian communique said that in the first day of the attack along the Svir, Soviet units occupied more than 200 populated places, including Voznesene, a district center of the Leningrad region.

Another Moscow broadcast stated that Soviet troops, hitting westward from the top of Lake Onezhskoe, have closed in on the town of Medvezhegorsk and already are fighting in its outskirts.

At the same time, the Russian drive which started 12 days ago

China Promised Peace

Wallace Sees Jap Aggression Ended Within Twelve Months

Chungking, June 21 (AP).—Vice President Henry A. Wallace told a state banquet tonight there was reason to hope the next 12 months "will be the final year of Japanese aggression in China," and President Chiang Kai-shek declared his nation and the three other great powers "must shoulder the responsibility of maintaining international peace."

Three essentials to maintenance of peace in eastern Asia and the Pacific, Wallace said, were demilitarization of Japan, collaboration among the nations of the Pacific and self-government for the peoples of Asia.

Assuring his guest of honor that China was ready to assume her share of the responsibility, Chiang asserted that a general system of collective security, backed if necessary by international force, was essential.

This, he maintained, must be carried out by the United States, the British Commonwealth, the Soviet Union and China.

The Japanese are now trading space for time in the Pacific," Wallace said, "but both time and space are against them. In due course we hope to find them trading space for time in China, but they will be faced with a determined Chinese army receiving cooperation from American forces which will allow no time for trading."

Wallace said a way to orderly, law-abiding self-government should be left open to the Japanese after their armies are beaten.

Showdown For Mastery Of Pacific May Be Near

Whole Jap Fleet May Be Involved, Nimitz Indicates; Details Lacking

Pearl Harbor, June 21 (U.P.).—The United States Fifth Fleet hurled its carrier-based aircraft against the Japanese navy between the Marianas and the Philippines Monday evening, Admiral Chester W. Nimitz announced today, in what may prove to be the first round in a history-making naval battle for mastery of the Pacific.

The Japanese force included battleships as well as aircraft carriers. Whether, as Nimitz had suggested, it might be the entire enemy fleet, and the greatest naval battle in history might result, remained to be seen.

Reconnaissance planes of Admiral Raymond A. Spruance's Fifth Fleet sighted the Japanese force Monday afternoon. The order to attack was given at once, and the planes, taking off from their fast carriers, roared westward.

Enemy Hit Before Dusk

The planes hit the enemy before dusk, and it was indicated that they had struck a terrific blow before darkness fell and gave the enemy a chance—which he might have taken—to flee.

No details were as yet available and it was indicated that the action had been broken off at least temporarily.

In an implicit challenge to the Japanese navy to fight it out to a finish in the waters between the Philippines and the Marianas, Nimitz had made it plain that he believed the United States had an unbeatable force there.

(At Washington, Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the United States Fleet, revealed that there were two complete fleets in the central Pacific, the Fifth under Spruance and the Third under Admiral William F. Halsey, jr.

It was believed here that the American fleet had tried to close on the enemy to force him to battle.

Japanese broadcasts heard in the United States and relayed here reported a fierce battle in progress and made fantastic claims of losses to the American fleet since the Marianas invasion a week ago, including the sinking of a 45,000-ton battleship of the Iowa class near Guam Friday and the damaging two of the 35,000-ton North Carolina class battleships and four carriers, three of the 27,000-ton Essex class and one of the 10,000-ton Independence class.

No Indication as to Losses

There was every hope here that Nimitz would soon be able to announce one of the great American victories of the Pacific war.

No assessment of losses on either side was yet possible.

Nimitz had revealed Tuesday that a powerful enemy force had been sighted about 850 miles west of the Marianas. Apparently it was the fleet from which Japanese planes had taken off to attack Spruance's fleet Sunday. In that attack the Japanese lost more than 300 of the 600 planes they have lost since the Saipan operation began.

At least now, the planes of the Fifth Fleet had had their chance at the Japanese fleet.

There was no indication that the Japanese had sent planes to attack the American Fleet—if their force had any planes left.

In his communique, Nimitz also announced that the infantrymen and Marines fighting on Saipan were advancing northward into Saipan from the west shore of Magicienne Bay, at the southeast corner, and that they had made progress against a Japanese strongpoint at Nafutan Point, which forms the southeast tip of the island.

Severe fighting continues.

Nazis Again Reeling On Italian Front

Panzers Hard Hit

Nazis Made To Dissipate Tank Force

Allied Advance Command Post, June 21 (U.P.).—A glaring shortage of German infantry in Normandy has compelled filed Marshal Karl Gerd von Rundstedt to commit his prized panzer units to the actual line of batle instead of holding them in the rear as a striking weapon, and information reaching Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's headquarters today is that at least 80 Nazi tanks have been destroyed.

Reporters at advanced headquarters have been told that von Rundstedt now is in a position where he cannot bolster his crumbling Normandy defenses without weakening othe rareas, including the Pas de Calais and southwest France.

Sending the panzers into front line battle, von Rundstedt sacrified 18 panthers and 27 tigers, as well as other type tanks. In addition, it was said here, many more German armored units have been crippled.

Enemy tank strength is not at its anticipated peak in Normandy because many of the panzers thrown into the battle in an effort to stem the Allied drive are not at full strength.

Allies Clear Foe From Fortress City of Perugia

Rome, June 21 (AP). — Allied troops have gouged the last stubborn German defenders out of the ancient fortress city of Perugia, 85 miles north of Rome, and tonight were battering the enemy steadily back through the hills more than 5 miles beyond the stronghold.

Across the breadth of Italy, the Nazi armies again reeled in retreat toward their long-prepared "Gothic" defense line beyond Florence, paying a heavy price in casualties and equipment.

It was estimated today that the enemy had suffered 70,000 casualties since the Allied "annihilation" offensive opened six weeks ago, and the end was not yet in sight. Fresh German graves and rusted trucks, tanks and guns marked the flight of the once-proud Nazi army of Italy.

It was disclosed that the Fifth Army, driving up the west coast, had taken prisoners from the 19th Luftwaffe Division, which left Belgium June 10, four days after the Normandy battle began. The Allied offensive here thus had achieved another of its purposes—to draw strength from German defenses in western Europe.

A heavy rain which hampered Allied movement for three days lifted today, and in bright sunshine our armor raced after the enemy. Forward elements of the Eighth Army, after capturing Perugia, quickly drove 5 miles northeast of the city. Another column occupied high ground to the northwest, within approximately 60 miles of Florence.

The swift Allied plunge up the Adriatic coastal road brought seizure of Grottammare, a gain of 50 airline miles since the Nazis began retreating in that sector. On the west coast American troops captured Monte Pescali, a bitterly defended height which dominated an important highway junction north of Grosseto. Castel del Piano also fell to the Yanks.

Thunderbolt fighter-bombers of the Allied Tactical Air Force badly damaged a 20,000-ton enemy aircraft carrier in Genoa harbor yesterday, scoring five direct hits. The vessel was believed to have been the Italian carrier Regola, which the Nazis have been refitting since it was damaged in a previous attack.

Noose Ends Life Of Army Captain In Alexandria

The body of Capt. Nathan Krilloff, 39, of 308 Duke st. Aleandria, Va. was found hanging from the door frame of a closet in his home at 5:30 p. m. yesterday by two friends, Alexandria police reported.

Captain Krilloff was a native of New York and was on duty in the Army Dental Corps. Three notes found in the room indicated he believed himself to be mentally ill, police said.

He was last seen yesterday morning about 8 a. m. Police were unable to say when he died but believed he had been dead several hours when found.

Dewey on First Ballot

Balloting on the Republican presidential nominee probably will take place Wednesday, and it is expetced to start off something like this:

"Alabama casts 13 votes for Thomas E. Dewey of New York."

Arizona will follow suit, and then will come Arkansas and California—all throwing their support to the New Yorker. There will be a brew-away from this bandwagon rush somewhere along the line, but tonight everything indicates that before the first roll call is over Dewey will have the 530 votes that will give him the nomination.

The Dewey tide of delegate strength rose with incoming train. Former Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas, the GOP nominee of 1936, arrived today and reiterated his prediction that it would be Dewey on the first ballot.

Landon suggested the names of three men as a possible vice presidential nominee: Gov. Simeon S. Wills of Kentucky, Gov. John Bricker of Ohio and Gov. Earl Warren of California.

Gov. Warren is a top-heavy favorite among the delegates. He is none too keen for the honor, although he will accept it nominated.

The Republicans are intensely eager to start off their 1944 campaign with a show of harmony, and anything that militates against this is cause for concern.

In this connection, a number of delegates already have expressed resentment over the treatment accorded Wndell Willkie by Harrison Spangler, chairman of the Republican National Committee. At a press conference yesterday, Spangler said that Willkie had not been invited to address the convention as had former President Herbert Hoover; that he had not been asked to present his views to the platfor mcommittee, and that he had not been asked to make a war bond speech, as had a score of lesser members of the party.

Willkie Gets Ticket

Willkie has been sent a ticket which entitles him to sit on the platform with othe rdignitaries, but that's all.

Mrs. Gladys B. Stewart, a delegate at large from Missouri, and a Dewey rooter, said that Spangler's conduct was "inexcusably crude."

"We should remember," she said, "that Wendell Willkie was our standard bearer in 1940, and that he polled 2 2million votes, which was more than any other Republican ever polled.

"We should remember, too, that Willkie still has a strong appeal for a great many Americans."

Willkie has not yet indicated whether he is coming to Chicago. Some men who are close to him think he will remain in New York.

It must be reported that this 1944 GOP Convention, important as it is, has not yet made much of a dent in Chicago's consciousness.

The big news out here, as it is in Washington, Bangor and San Francisco, is the seige of Cherbourg and the promise of a great Naval battle in the Pacific.

GOP foreign policy thinking, had quietly stepped out of the running for chairman, apparently satisfied that the proposed peace plank is now over the hump.

Declaration Approved

The proposed declaration, bringing the Mackinac Island agreement "up to date," was approved last week by a six-man subcommittee including Austin, and will be submitted to the committee Friday by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), subcommittee chairman.

Through John Foster Dulles, New York international lawyer, it was subsequently approved by Thomas E. Dewey. Taft's support made possible opposition from the John Bricker faction a comparatively negligible factor.

ities, while Allied planes showered them with leaflets advising immediate surrender. Allied 21st Army group headquarters said the city was unlikely to hold out much longer in any event.

Its defenses are altogether the mose elaborate yet encountered in France, but "we have the turtle on his back," said an Allied spokesman.

The general advance up the peninsula continued rapidly, with a headquarters communique announcing the liberation of the towns of Teurtheville-Hague and Acqueville, southwest of Cherbourg, in part of a board thrust that has carried the Americans within five miles of the sea.

On the southeast, the Americans have driven forward astride the main road north from Valognes to Cherbourg.

On the British-Canadian sector to the east of the Cherbourg Peninsula, heavy fighting continued in the Tilly-Caen sectors, but the series of attacks and counterattacks left the front virtually unchanged.

Tanks Fight for Hottot

Here some of the heaviest fighting of the entire front was taking place. The Tommies captured Onchy, three and a half miles southwest of Tilly, and then Hottot, a mile farther east.

For the second day no action of consequence was reported along the southern front of the American salient across the Cherbourg Peninsula.

The Germans seemed to have let slip their opportunity for any major counterattack against Carentan, weakest link of the Allied beachhead, and the Americans were pushing well across the floodlands west and south of Carentan to stronger positions. Farther southeast, American patrols were reported about 2 miles north of the road center of St. Lo.

Cherbourg was becoming a sort of European Singapore. The Germans apparently had not anticipated having to defend the city from the landward "back door."

Batteries Point to Sea

At least seven great coastal batteries pointed out to sea make it nearly invulnerable to direct naval attack, and the Americans pressing in from the south found the flanks on both sides of the peninsula guarded by extensive minefields and tank obstacles and ditches.

Coastal roads to the east to Cap Levy and to the west to Cap de la Hague remained in German hands, but both were under American artillery fire. Cap de la Hague was described as heavily fortified, but even this would afford the Nazis merely a delay rather than escape.

Naval sources declared, however, that such eventualities had been considered in advance and said they were confident that no matter what the Nazis were able to do, Cherbourg could be put back into working order quickly to supply our forces. They have encountered and mastered similar situations elsewhere, such as at Tripoli in Libya and Naples.

munique said, "carrier-based reconnaissance planes of the Fifth Fleet sighted a Japanese fleet, which included carriers and battleships, approximately midway between the Mariana Islands and Luzon.

"Aircraft of our fast carrier task force were immediately ordered to attack, and made contact with the ene .y fleet before dusk.

"Eenemy losses and our own losses have not yet been assessed.

"Additional details will be made known as they become available."

Hints that Japs Were Fleeing

Nimitz's reference to a "fast" carrier force was taken to indicate that crack ships of the new Essex class of 27,000 tons and the Independence class of 10,000 tons were engaged.

Nimitz here, and Navy Secretary James V. Forrestall at Washington, had expressed with vigor their hope that the Japanese fleet would fight an action to a finish, in a direct ship-against-ship battle.

At least two great fleets had come into aerial contact nearly 5000 miles west of the United States, in waters less than 1500 miles from Japan. It had been two years since the Japanese had made their costly and humiliating attempt to attack Pearl Harbor for the second time and had met defeat in the battle of Midway.

Japanese and German broadcasts, relayed here by listeners in San Francisco, New York and London, ha dtold of a big scale battle north of the Marianas—one which, a Japanese spokesman was quoted as saying, would have "lasting repercussions" on the Pacific war.

Forrestal, in his statement at Washington, before the communique, said there were some indications the American fleet might already be engaged in decisive battle. He intimated a belief that Spruance's fleet was pursuing the Japanese when he said that it "may have succeeded in catching up" with the enemy.

Admiral Ernest J. King, who was with Forrestal, said he was not worried about the outcome. If the Japanese fought, he said, they would be giving the cooperation which the Navy had long expected.

"The view is that the sooner the Jap fleet fights the better we'll be satisfied," Forrestal said.

New Jersey purposely to stage the demonstration.

Justice Eicher asked her why she interrupted the trial.

"I can't give the reason now," she responded. "I'll tell the facts later."

Next Justice Eicher inquired whether she knew of any reason why she should not be held in contempt of court. The woman stood mute.

"This court holds you in contempt," pronounced Justice Eicher, "and sentences you to 10 days in jail, during which time you will undergo a mental examination."

Mistrial Motion Denied

As Justice Eicher questioned the woman, he unfolded across the bench the seized banner which, in badly misspelled words, printed on ordinary kitchen table oil cloth, read:

"A letter to Attorney Rogge.

"I do not know the guilt of these men and women on trial. But I do know that our own corupt American counsel

"Leland B. Morris

"Bernard Gottlieb

"And their henshmen are quilty of treason and atrocity.

"Why are they still at large?

"Why was this case suppressed?

"They crucified a shell shockt war veteran.

"Because he coud not pay a bribe."

As deputy marshals escorted Mrs. Turner out of the court room, James J. Laughlin, attorney for two of the 29 defendants in the sedition case, renewed an oft-repeated motion for a mistrial on the ground that the inscription on the banner had prejudiced the jury.

Returning crewmen said fires still blazed at Hamburg and other targets struck on Tuesday's mission over Germany.

Alexandria Cab Drivers Joining Union

Alexandria taxicab drvers yesterday took the first step toward labor union organization when they voted to apply for membership in the International Brotherhood of Teamsters Union of the American Federation of Labor, at a meeting held in Painters' Union Hall, 413 King st.

Charles Neary, E. Seeley and G. Arthur were named to represent the estimated total of more than 100 drivers in the city. It was decided to request the A. F. of L. union to send an organizer to the next meeting within the next three weeks to outline the brotherhood's reply to the application and to develop the organization.

The drivers were addressed by L. S. McCullough, representative of the Alexandria Central Labor Union, AFL, who said that they will have the advantages of unity inaction and the support of the individual's interests in forming a union. H. T. McIntyre, business agent of the Alexandria Painters Union, also spoke in favor of the movement.

J. Fred Kirchner, president of the Alexandria Central Labor Union and State labor inspector for the northern Virginia area, cited the division among the drivers of the Yellow Cab Co. in the recent 24 hour strike.

Capt. Edgar Sims, chief of police and member of the three-man traffic board, said yesterday that negotiations for smaller two- and three-cab stands in various parts of the city to decentralize the company as a result of complaints against the St. Asaph st. terminal, have been progressing smoothly.

Four smaller stands have been approved with the consent of nearby property owners, and additional applications for stands submitted by the company will be acted upon by the board some time this week, Captain Sims said.

Marine Women Seeking Bozo, AWOL at Post

"General Bozo," pet English bulldog of a Marine who served on Guadalcanal, is missing from Henderson Hall, the Marine women's barracks in Arlington, and the Marines admit they are "desperate." Within a few days Bozo's master, a patient in a naval hospital for treatment of malaria, is coming to see him, and Bozo is gone—AWOL. The big friendly mascot disappeared on June 12.

When their son, Field Music Corpl. Harry G. Gomolla of Bloomfield, N. J., went overseas, Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Gomolla arranged for Bozo to stay with the Marines. Sergt. Lucille Murphy of Wheeling, W. Va., of the women Marines at Henderson had taken the dog and became his special keeper and each month sent his master, Corpl. Gomolla, pictures and reports of his pet. His master now writes that he "will be here in a few days to visit Bozo."

Efforts of the Animal Rescue League and the dog pounds in Washington and Arlington County, have failed to locate him. Anyone with any information may call the women Marines, through the officer of the day, Henderson Hall, REpublic 7400, Extension 7721.

quietly that Justice Proctor finally asked him to raise his voice.

"The defense does not contend that drunkeness is an excuse to commit murder. We do contend, however, that the defendant was too drunk to know what he was doing and could not have planned the murder as the indictment charges. In all legal justice ypu cannot convict him of first degree murder," Burnett said.

Justice Proctor instructed the jury that neither English nor American law recognizes voluntary drunkenness as an excuse for a criminal act.

"Public policy forbids that it be so," he stated.

He later pointed out, however, that drunkenness may so impair a man's faculties that he is rendered incapable of achieving any of the element that make up first or second degree murder—deliberation, premeditation or malice.

One Soviet spearhead was reported to have driven beyond Manikkala, 6 miles northeast of Viipuri. Soviet dispatches estimated Russian troops might reach Helsinki in 15 to 20 days.

The battered Finnish army was believed already to have used up its tactical reserves on the Karelian Isthmus, and it was not thought to have any strategic reserves. Finnish counterattacks had failed because of great Soviet inferiority in planes, tanks and guns.

The Germans note dthe fall of Viipuri with apparent misgivings. DNB news agency broadcast that "German leadership is quite alert to the fact that new Russian attacks must be reckoned with. All preparations have been made to forthcoming counter attacks."

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Russia And Finland

ERIC JOHNSTON, in Moscow, pushed into the foreground the biggest single reality on the international horizon. The Russians are going to need American machines to rebuild the Soviet Union, and American manufacturers are going to want those orders.

CHILDS

That reality will outweigh a great deal of talk on both sides of the collaboration issue. What will happen after Russia has been rebuilt is another matter. But for the immediate future—20 to 25 years perhaps—the foundation will rest on mutual advantage.

Already millions of dollars in Russian orders have been entered on the books of big American firms. The goods will be delivered when peace-time production is started again. And this is only a small beginning.

AGAINST THIS reality, the teacup tempest here in Washington over dismissal of the Finnish diplomats looks silly indeed. It is, of course, serving the purpose of those who would like to divide the Allies.

The same people who went to dinner with Hjalmar Procope, the Finnish Minister, and shuddered with him over Russian "barbarism," are now setting up a loud outcry. Procope conceived it his duty to turn as many people as possible against Russia and for Finland and he did it with a glad-handing fervor that was positively American.

Perhaps, if he had been less successful, he and his two counselors of legation would not have been sent on their way. All sorts of disgruntled people—the anti-British and the anti-Russians, and the anti-Administration crowd—turned up at Finnish dinner tables. Gossip about the war was the medium of exchange.

It's just possible that Procope got the idea these people represented all of American opinion. If he sent word back to his government that Americans were opposed to collaboration with Russia, then he did his country a great disservice.

According to reports reaching here, the Finnish people have not been informed of the true course of the war. A drastic censorship has blacked out much information from the outside world.

AT NO TIME have the people been allowed to know how serious was the plight of their little country, caught between two great warring powers on the Baltic. They believed the Finnish position to be more secure and the possibility of American intervention in their behalf far more likely than actually was the case.

That was one reason the Soviet peace terms of two months ago were rejected. Of course, they were harsh terms. But what will happen now threatens to be far more harsh.

When the Russians offered their terms, the State Department tried in a friendly way to persuade the stalwart forest people to lay down their arms. So did the Swedes, even old King Gustav throwing his weight on the side of peace.

The Finns said no. They are stubborn. Their stubbornness is at the same time their strength and their weakness.

In their lonely northern land of forests and lakes, they forged an admirable civilization. The Soviet attack of 1939 touched off a chain of consequences not yet ended. One thing is certain, and that is that the world will be the poorer if that civilization is destroyed.

GREAT CONCERN is felt in Sweden over the real possibility that several hundred thousand Finnish refugees may seek safety as the Russian armies draw nearer to Helsinki. Already 40,000 Finnish children are being fed and housed in addition to nearly 50,000 refugees from Norway, Denmark, Germany and other countries under the heel of dictatorship. Apart from the mere physical difficulties, a mass invasion would for the first time give Sweden a minority problem.

When I was in Sweden a year ago, many people spoke of their fear of Russian aggression. Yet, Sweden's leading capitalist told me he was preparing to take big Russian orders.

"You can't," he said, "ignore a country of 200 million people."

That is the same kind of common sense spoken by Eric Johnston.

Off The Record

"She's back to that one—Let's go, this is where we came in!"

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Finland

WE ARE NOW within sight of that crucial moment of the war when the statesmen must control events or lose their power to control them. This moment will not last forever: indeed it will already have ended when the bugles give the order to cease firing. What happens after that will be determined by the direction which Messrs. Churchill, Stalin, and Roosevelt are able to give now to the civil forces in the defeated, the liberated, the neutral, and the victorious countries.

LIPPMANN

For now their influence is at its maximum because they preside over a military power which is supreme and not yet expended. Once the firing ceases, the influence of this military power will rapidly decline, and their present opportunity will never return.

For this reason a statesmanlike settlement with Finland is important, and with France and with Poland imperative.

A TRUE settlement with Finland can be had only by the adoption in Helsinki and in Moscow of the Good Neighbor principle. Specifically, this would mean that an independent, democratic Finland based its security not upon the German connection, not upon being a buffer between Russia and the west, not upon the balance of power, but upon an alliance with the Soviet Union; and that the Soviet Union based its security in the northern region and toward Scandinavia upon a firm and friendly respect for Finnish independence. No other settlement will work. No other takes account of the realities and of the vital interests at stake.

The core of the difficulty in reaching this settlement is that the Finnish democracy has been overawed by pro-Nazi and Fascist oligarchs who put Finland into the second Russian war and have prevented her from withdrawing. They have exploited the historic Finnish fear of Russia, the general fear of bolshevism, and the good will of the western nations. Americans, who are quite right in thinking that the Finnish nation is a most likable and respectable democracy, have had hidden from them the fact that Finland has been in the hands of highly reactionary and dangerous men who, by censorship and police repression, dominated the Finnish democracy, and, there is some reason to think, even Field Marshal von Mannerheim. These men have been using our friendship for the Finnish democracy to serve their own sinister or misguided ends.

THE PROBLEM of the Finnish settlement is how these Finnish fascists are to be disposed of. And it is here that Stalin's statesmanship will be put to the test. The question will be whether he takes a course which permits and encourages the Finns themselves to liquidate their fascists, or whether he relies upon the Red Army and a puppet government to perform this necessary task. The first solution will require more magnanimity and patience than most nations, which have suffered as Russia has suffered, are able to display in the heat of battle. But it is the only right solution, and it would pay handsome dividends in all matters that are vital to the Soviet Union.

For it will not only disarm Finland more thoroughly than any physical disarmament: it will be the foundation of a wholly different relation than Russia has ever before enjoyed with the Scandinavian peoples and in the whole region of the Baltic. And—most vitally of all—it will determine their attitude, which is critically important, to the German settlement.

THE ONLY certain way to liquidate permanently the Finnish oligarchy is to let the Finnish people themselves do it. If the Red Army does it, these defeated and discredited men will obtain a new lease on life underground; they will acquire the support which always goes to men who can claim that, whatever their mistakes, they represent the national cause against foreign domination.

It would be idle to say this if democracy in Finland were not a genuine thing. But there can be no real doubt that it is and, that being the case, the great objective of the settlement with Finland must be to strengthen its position as against the oligarchs and conspirators who subverted it. Its position can be made as strong as it is possible now to make it by giving it the same reasonable and moderate territorial terms which the Soviet Union offered the reactionary government, and by treating the indemnity as negotiable. It cannot be in the real interest of the Soviet Union to impoverish a friendly Finland, or by harsh treatment to keep Finland unfriendly.

If the defeat of Germany is decisive, the downfall of the Finnish oligarchy is certain. After that the successful reconstruction of Finland will best insure tranquillity on the Soviet borders and with all her neighbors and allies.

THOUGH THE circumstances and the issues are very different, the same conception of their power and their real interests ought to reign in the relations of America, Britain, Russia, France, and Poland. They must be lifted above the level of personalities, of old formulae, conflicting intelligence reports, and bits of disputed territory. The Soviet-Polish and the Roosevelt-De Gaulle controversies are not so much questions that can be resolved. They will have to be dissolved, and absorbed into the greater question of the settlement of the war.

The premise of any conceivable settlement in Europe, and perhaps also in the world, is that in liquidating German aggression over the long period which will follow the armistice, there will be not three, but five, principal powers. France and Poland are absolutely indispensable in any durable European settlement. They are the two great neighbors of Germany, and nothing can endure which they do not actively support.

FOR THIS reason a complete understanding between Poland and the Soviets should be determined by the need to have a strong Poland, which by its own authentic will, is the ally of the Soviet Union and one of the makers and enforcers of the German settlement.

For the same reason a complete understanding with France is necessary, and in reaching this understanding the controlling consideration should be our ability to foresee that the armistice imposed on Germany will be useless, or worse, unless France is fully committed to enforce it. If we take this view, we shall see in correct perspective the pedantic, the metaphysical, problem of "recognition", and the transitory issues which have arisen to plague us because we have not dealt greatly with the fundamental issues.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

FEW BUSINESS LEADERS know it, but many inside the War Production Board were flabbergasted at the ruling that no company getting less than a 12-million-dollar cutback should receive Government aid or consideration. This was the recent decision of the special committee on postwar conversion.

What it means is that the big companies which got most of the war orders will now get Government help, while the little companies won't. For instance, if a plant is notified by the Army or Navy to cut back a war order of 11 million dollars worth of jeeps, it gets no consideration from the Government. But if it gets socked a 12-million-dollar cancellation, it can get help. A lot of small companies doing a million dollars' worth of business or less are going to be among the hardest hit.

It still remains a fact that seven United States companies got 50 per cent of all war orders. They are General Motors, du-Pont, Bethlehem Steel, Newport News Ship, New York Ship, Curtiss-Wright and Standard Oil of New Jersey.

Jesse Jones Sees His Boss

WHEN JESSE JONES went in to see his boss in the White House last week, ostensibly it was not over the Texas political revolt. Instead F. D. R. wanted to see him about the subsidy for stripper oil wells, which the rest of the Administration agreed on but for which Jesse Jones refused to write an RFC check. Jesse smilingly reversed himself on the oil subsidy following the White House talk.

But his position regarding the Texas anti-Roosevelt revolt remains the same: "I never knew anything about it until I read it in the papers." This, in effect, was what he took occasion to tell the President during their oil conference. Friends gathered afterwards that F. D. R. didn't exactly believe him.

"Dear Alben" Barkley would give his eye teeth to know whether or not the President has completely forgiven him for his sudden revolt on the tax veto message last winter. The answer, according to White House insiders, is that the President has almost forgiven him, but not quite. If and when there is a fourth term, Jesse Jones, they say, may be in a different category.

Rent Relief

Agitation for extension of rent control to commercial properties is rapidly gaining momentum as instances multiply of small shopkeepers and service establishments confronted by exorbitant demands for rent increases. In many cases the demands of landlords are equivalent to a sentence of doom for the business concerns occupying their premises, since the tenants are unable to find other quarters at rentals they can afford. Local cases of rent gouging have been brought to the attention of The Post and in New York the American Business Congress is trying to obtain relief for commercial tenants who are the victims of rent increases. The situation is, of course, aggravated by speculative sales of real estate at inflated prices.

As we have previously pointed out, the extension of rent control to commercial properties would put a heavy burden on the OPA; but if present trends continue, official controls will be inescapable in communities unable by voluntary action to curb commercial rent abuses. We cannot permit profiteering owners of office buildings and factories to exploit commercial tenants any more than we can afford to permit their shopkeeper tenants to exploit customers. Unless a stop is put to commercial rent profiteering, the consuming public will soon be deprived of essential services provided by ejected small shopkeepers. Furthermore, the public will experience a general rise in living costs resulting, from higher overhead charges of businesses occupying rented establishments.

Election Fraud

A handful of men who call themselves Americans have brazenly announced a plot to steal the approaching national election. There is no nicer or more temperate term that can properly be used to characterize their scheme. They plan to subvert the electoral votes of three Southern States by having these cast against the candidate whom the electors were chosen by the people of their States to support. Probably this is within the fringes of legality—as much so, at least, as many another slick confidence game. But it runs directly counter to our established democratic process. We do not believe that the people of the United States would countenance so gross a fraud.

Think for a moment of the situation which this scheme might create. We shall read our newspapers on the morning of November 8 believing that we have chosen a President through the orderly processes of our electoral system. We shall know how a majority of the voters in each State cast their ballots and from this we shall assume that the candidate entitled to a majority of electoral votes has been elected. But it is possible, under the stratagem which has been proposed, that when the electors give their votes some six weeks later, on the first Monday after the second Wednesday in December, we shall discover suddenly that our own election has been nullified. Between this sort of coup d'etat and the palace revolutions organized by ambitious juntas in less stable republics, there is not much to choose. In either case, democracy is stultified.

The names of several distinguished and reputable citizens—among them a member of the President's own Cabinet—have been openly associated with this plot. They can free themselves from the stigma of identification with it by denouncing it forthrightly for what it is. The time for them to do this is already past due. Their silence is an encouragement to the schemers and a sign of acquiescence in the scheme. It seems to us that the President should not tolerate in his official family men who manifest so little loyalty to democratic institutions.

We shall candidly cite two names, since both have been commonly reported in connection with the plot: Jesse Jones and Will Clayton. Both hold positions of immense authority and influence in our Government. Neither has yet used his authority and influence in any way to quash this projected subversion of a national election. The President has only himself to thank, of course, for the power which these men wield. He elevated them. Indeed, when confronted a year ago with a dispute between his progressive and indisputably loyal Vice President, Henry A. Wallace, on the one hand, and Mr. Jones on the other, he resolved the matter entirely in the latter's favor. There would be a kind of poetic justice in the threat which Mr. Jones is now said to raise, were its implications not so weighted with danger for the country as a whole.

The lesson of all this is, we believe, that the President can afford no further appeasement of the men in his own party who would undo him and the principles for which he stands. To yield to them again—in particular, to yield to the blackmail pressure which they have brought against him—would be to shatter his own prestige and undermine his own authority. He had better face this issue toughly—now. It is time for a showdown.

Pacific Armageddon?

So rapidly, it seems, is the war moving toward its climactic phases in both great theaters that even such news as the siege and imminent fall of Cherbourg is overshadowed by the startling announcement from Admiral Nimitz that the Japanese fleet has come out of hiding and that what may well be the decisive battle of the Pacific war is now at hand. Indeed, the Tokyo radio declares the battle already to have been joined. We have Admiral Nimitz's statement of Tuesday that the Japanese armada comprises "possibly their entire fleet" and Tokyo's admission that the American Fifth Fleet "includes the greater part of the enemy's warships in the Pacific Ocean." The rest, of course, is silence—a silence that will not be lifted until after the issue has been decided. In the meantime, no doubt, even the highest naval officials in Washington will be as much in the dark as the rest of us as to progress of what may prove the greatest naval engagement of all time.

Thus the hour for which we have been hoping and waiting since December 7, 1941, seems to have struck. Not anywhere in Washington is there slightest doubt that our fleet will come off victorious, and we have Admiral Nimitz's cool assurance that the Fifth Fleet has acquired "enough muscle to handle the situation." Ever since our Navy acquired preponderant strength in the Pacific its main effort has been to smoke out the main Jap fleet from its hiding place in home waters, and the first real inkling of the extremity at which the Japanese war lords have now arrived comes in this news that the gauge of battle has at last been accepted. The decision seems to have been forced by the current fighting on Saipan, concerning which details are still obscure, and by the recent capture by American soldiers and Marines of an important airfield on that island. Saipan is less than 1500 miles from Tokyo, or from Luzon or from the great Japanese naval base at Formosa—that is to say a distance scarcely greater than that of Denver from Washington. The recent and already historic raid of the B-29's against Yawata gave the Japanese warning of what they must expect when the American occupation of Saipan has been completed and consolidated. For the Japanese fleet to remain immobile in these circumstances could only have meant Pearl Harbor in reverse. And with the Japanese home waters and the whole China Sea thus threatened, no place remains whither their fleet can retreat. Their only choice now—and a desperate one it is—is to fight it out.

The battle appears to be taking shape somewhere in the waters between Saipan and the Philippines. This is an extremely large area, covering perhaps some millions of square miles, with abundant room for maneuver. It would be a great mistake to suppose that the decision of the Japanese war lords to risk this desperate action means anything like the mad and gallant gesture of Admiral Cevera at Santiago, or that our victory will be so cheap. Not for a long time has there been contemptuous talk of Japanese gunnery or of Japanese naval architecture or Japanese naval seamanship and discipline. We must expect large losses of both men and of ships. But if the Japanese navy is sent to the bottom, the Pacific campaign, in the strategic sense, will be virtually over. For a long time Japanese shipping has been sustaining losses far beyond any possible rate of replacement. With her army distended over so great an area, Japan could not for very long wage anything much better than a guerilla warfare. Armies cannot fight long without supplies, and without convoys the Japanese problem of supply would be insoluble.

Faux Pas

There were grounds for Secretary Hull's indignation over Mr. Oliver Lyttelton's speech in London. Mr. Lyttelton, who is Britain's Minister of Production, and a member of the War Cabinet, said that "Japan was provoked into attacking the Americans at Pearl Harbor." The observation was subsequently amended, but the damage had been done. Mr. Lyttelton, who ought to have more common sense and more political sense, merely repeated a piece of foolishness which the bitter-enders toward the President used to utter. They had been silenced by facts which would convince a schoolboy. Thus the prospect had been opened up in the last few weeks that there would be no dissension on issues of either war or foreign policy in the coming campaign. Obviously Mr. Hull, who has been laboring patiently in the last six months to take foreign policy out of politics, could not allow the Lyttelton remark to go by without instant repudiation.

The long history of Japan's aggressions since the invasion of Manchuria in 1931 is a rebuttal of Mr. Lyttelton's assertion. Japan by that act flouted the Kellogg Pact. Secretary Stimson even at that time wanted to take action in defense of American interests. The Nine Power Pact was the next multilateral arrangement to go into the discard. Japan likewise tore up her arms agreements with this country. In addition, the war lords started to move the Nipponese armies into China proper and didn't stop till they were at Camrah Bay, whence they overlooked the Philippines. In the processes, American lives and property and even warships were attacked. Japan, indeed, had closed almost all the accesses to the Pacific when this country began to take alarm. Then, in response to public pressure, we clapped embargoes on American exports to Japan, and war became inevitable.

Mr. Churchill is reputed to have wondered only a short while before Pearl Harbor when the United States would wake up to the Japanese menace and take military as well as economic action. Pearl Harbor supplied the awakener. It was all of a piece with a campaign of aggression which, as the Japanese themselves aren't loath to admit, was intended to make the Pacific a Japanese lake. Mr. Matsuoka when he was foreign minister of Japan just before war broke out outlined the great Japan as including all of Oceania as well as the "co-prosperity sphere" of half of Asia. That in all these circumstances Japan can be held to have been "provoked" into action at Pearl Harbor is a gross misreading of history.

Insurance Or Doles

Senator George's Postwar Committee has gone on record in opposition to Administration proposals aimed at establishing uniform standards of unemployment compensation during the postwar adjustment period by means of Federal supplements to inadequate State benefit payments. The committee recommends instead a limited extension of coverage to now-exempt workers, including Government employes. It merely "urges" the States to liberalize the provisions of their unemployment insurance systems, and, as an incentive to that end, suggests that the solvency of State unemployment funds should be guaranteed through Federal loans.

In our opinion such half-hearted measures would have negligible effect. Those States with reserves so limited as to be speedily exhausted by serious local unemployment are not likely to be lured into liberalizing their systems by offers of aid when calamity threatens. Moreover, the existence of separate State unemployment insurance systems creates special financial problems that would not exist if the insurance coverage were Nation-wide and insurance reserves were pooled. Even the Administration proposal advanced by OWM Director Byrnes is a temporary makeshift. It is, however, a compromise program which would achieve some of the advantages of federalization without encountering as strong political opposition as the opposition aroused by demands for outright federalization.

The George Postwar Committee report on employment contains cogent arguments in support of the very proposals it has just rejected. For instance, the report emphasizes the magnitude of the postwar employment problem. It stresses the labor dislocations resulting from the war and the difficult adjustments that will be required to provide jobs for demobilized servicemen and dismissed warworkers. The committee emphatically recognizes that the solution of these problems constitutes a national, not a local or State, responsibility. It says that the "severity of the transition period and the ability of industry following that period to absorb 8 million to 10 million more workers than it has ever absorbed before will depend very largely on governmental policy and this committee is primarily concerned with shaping that policy." In short, the inescapable implication is that the postwar unemployment problem is a responsibility of the whole Nation acting through the Federal Government.

The labor market is a national market. Hence even if State insurance systems were in all respects satisfactory as to amount and duration of benefits, migratory workers would often be deprived of benefits. As matters now stand, workers may lose out not only by moving from State to State but by shifting from covered or insured to uncovered employment. They forfeit benefits also when they move from States where standards are comparatively high to those where the insurance benefits are meager. The result is that desired mobility of the labor market is not achieved. Our economy, as Mr. Willkie says, is interdependent. Consequently it becomes an indefensible anomaly to set up independent insurance systems that are conspicuous for their lack of uniformity of benefits. In our opinion, therefore, reliance upon State systems of unemployment insurance to tide demobilized workers over the difficult postwar transition period is doomed to failure.

Director Byrnes has expressed opposition to revival of WPA or payment of dismissal wages to be charged against contracts. Yet doles in some form, paid for by the Federal Government, are the alternatives which we shall almost certainly be forced to embrace in the absence of a uniform, adequate system of unemployment insurance benefits financed in part by the Federal Government.

GOING HOME

The honey-locusts drip their golden scent,
The clematis seems whiter than before
And shaggy peonies, their petals spent,
Star the tall timothy beside the door;
A drowsing dragon-fly on glittering wings
Hovers above the yellow marigold,
A laughing child, beneath the pear-tree swings,—
Here is no place for blight or grief or cold.

The milk-pails tinkle as they fill with foam,
The high-piled hay is swaying on its load
Moving between the elms that line the road,
The bees are building honey in the comb;
And over all the smell of grass, fresh-mowed.
All this is calling me—for this is home.

Labor In Politics

THE CIO POLITICAL Action Committee's conference in Washington last weekend leaves no doubt that labor will play an important, if not a crucial, part in the fall elections.

The conference declared its intention to mobilize the electorate behind President Roosevelt, his "New Bill of Rights," and those members of Congress who support both F. D. R. and his program. It also voted to reorganize on a broader basis as the National Political Action Committee, to take in pro-Administration elements outside the labor movement.

To remove all doubts of the committee's legality under the Smith-Connally Act, future contributions will come from individuals rather than from union treasuries (the source of $700,000 collected for political "educational work" so far).

Although more workers will be unable to vote this year than ever before because of war migration, labor's votes will be of more strategic importance than in previous elections, for several reasons:

Union's Political Trends

More workers than ever before belong to unions—some 13 or 14 millions, in all. And Gallup polls indicate that labor in general is 3-to-2 in favor of Roosevelt as against Dewey, while union members give the President a 2-to-1 majority.

This election will be closer than the last one, without a doubt; and the result will hinge largely on the number of union workers who go to the polls. This time the national election may be determined by the electoral votes of a State like New York, where in 1940 Roosevelt received 417,000 American Labor Party votes and carried the State by only 224,000.

Public opinion analysts go so far as to predict that if only 30 million votes are cast this fall, the Republicans will win hands down, whereas if 40 or 45 million voters turn out the Democrats will almost certainly come out ahead.

The tremendous job of getting the labor vote out can hardly be done by the Democratic Party itself, limited as the major parties are by the Hatch Act to a total expenditure of three million dollars. Therefore organized labor's political drive will be of immense importance to the Democrats, as well as to pro-labor Republicans and independents.

One additional factor should not be forgotten: the large number of voters who have not yet made up their minds about the fall election.

The CIO's political strategy promises to be more effective than any previous attempt by labor to swing votes. In 1936 the unions contributed at least $770,000 to the Democratic campaign, either directly or through Labor's Nonpartisan League; but the latter organization, dominated by John L. Lewis, did not reach effectively into the rank and file of labor. And in 1940, Lewis did his best to split the labor vote.

In this election the CIO committee is organizing on a grass-roots basis, with local committees to pass on local candidates, as well as committees on a State and national level.

Maximum Registration

Their first objective is to get the maximum registration possible in the communities where workers live, on the assumption that once registered they will vote mostly for Roosevelt and pro-labor candidates. They are using the tactics of old-line political machines like Tammany—neighborhood and precinct organization, personal canvassing for votes. But while the traditional machine tries to keep the registration and the vote small, so it can be controlled, labor's aim is precisely the opposite.

A CIO pamphlet called "Every Worker a Voter," which has been distributed widely, puts it this way, in terms the working man can understand:

"A big vote is always a good vote. When everybody votes we get good Government . . . In 1940 about 50 million people voted . . . the results were pretty good. But in 1942 only 28 million people voted. Now we all know what happened. We elected . . . a Congress which refuses to back the President and his program . . ."

Although the CIO committee disclaims credit for New Deal victories in Alabama and Florida, there is little doubt that it contributed to the retirement of Congressman Dies in Texas through registering CIO oil workers.

In Oregon the Political Action Committee played a large part in liberal Republican Wayne Morse's victory over Senator Rufus Holman in the recent primaries, showing that it can operate outside the Democratic Party. In southern California CIO and AFL committees combined with the Hollywood Democratic Committee to make a virtual New Deal sweep of the primaries.

It is no wonder that those who fear the labor vote have been arguing that the CIO Political Action Committee should be suppressed. The current Fortune survey shows that on the question "Leaving aside contributions of money, do you think it is all right or not all right for labor unions as organizations to put on a campaign themselves for the election of a particular candidate?" 39.5 of the public say "all right," 43 per cent say not. But a plurality of the Democrats give their approval, while 53 per cent of the Republicans disapprove.

And More To Come

As The Allied Plans Unfold

WHEN D-DAY ARRIVED in the west, the Russian front was quiet, as it had been for many weeks. A few days later the Red army launched an offensive on the Finnish sector.

That drive has since made considerable progress and has great potentialities. If its result is to knock Finland out of the war in a comparatively short time, it will have justified itself many times over. The elimination of Finland would, at this stage, be a serious blow to German economy and German morale and even more to the morale of Germany's Balkan satellites.

However, the fact remains that the fighting in Finland ties up only between 7 and 8 of the 230 German divisions that are strung along that vast front from Petsamo to Ploesti and beyond. The great bulk of the German army in Russia was not engaged on D-Day and is still unengaged.

YET NOT a word of criticism, not a sign of impatience has emanated from London or Washington because of this situation.

This is not because Americans and British are more polite than were the Russians when the situation was the reverse of the present. The silence of London and Washington conceals no inner alarm. It merely reflects confidence in Russia, certainty regarding what lies ahead. For since Teheran, complete agreement has obtained among Great Britain, Russia and the United States regarding military operations.

As Winston Churchill put it in that highly optimistic statement he made at the Mexican Embassy in London the other day: "The execution of the plans adopted there (at Teheran) is far from being complete." In other words, the invasion of France is only one of the tremendous blows that are to be struck against the Reich this year. Others are on the way.

THE GERMANS certainly are under no illusions about the seeming quiescence of the Russians on the Eastern Front. A disaster has overtaken them in Italy; their needs in France are growing; but they haven't dared to move a division from Russia to the west. Even when quiescent, the Red army continues to contain the great bulk of the Wehrmacht.

With each passing week, moreover, the Russians are able to improve their communications, move up and deploy their reserves, pile up stocks of food and weapons back of the front lines. So when they do strike it will be with a force that will eclipse the force that enabled them to drive the Germans back from the Volga to the Pruth. And that moment of all-out attack may not be long delayed.

GERMANY'S answer to the increasingly acute menace of mounting Allied power has been a "secret weapon," variously described as a pilotless plane, an aerial torpedo and a rocket bomb.

The lavish use of this weapon has resulted in a certain amount of killing and destruction in England. But what the U-boat failed to do, what Hitler's panzer divisions failed to do, this rocket bomb certainly cannot accomplish.

The Germans have made a great hullaballoo about it because it is all they have. Thinking Germans will not be deceived. They will note that at the very height of the rocket bomb assault on Britain, the Cherbourg Peninsula was bisected and Cherbourg was isolated. The Germans should know by now and even Hitler should have learned that this war is not going to be won by terror.

THE FACT is that the rocket bomb is not a sign of strength, but a confession of weakness on the part of Germany. It emphasizes the decline of the Luftwaffe which Hitler once used so lavishly and which he now finds it necessary to hoard. It underlines the great shortage of military manpower in the Reich.

And manpower, too, is something which Hitler now finds it necessary to hoard. On paper the German army is still an impressively large force. But it is a divided, a decentralized army incapable of being adequately reinforced in the west or the east. And at every point the force which the Allies are sending in to oppose the Germans is either superior already or may soon be superior to the force the Germans have or can muster.

In his memoirs, Ludendorff notes that at the time of the armistice, Germany's reserves consisted of but a single division. Germany's manpower barrel is not yet that near to being empty. But the time is approaching when it will be.

Bolivian Recognition

The significant thing about the article by Marquis Childs on Bolivia is the directness with which he shot at the fundamental issue in the present situation. This issue is the lot of the poverty-stricken masses of that country.

Your columnist has quite evidently given more than a hasty glance at his subject. Only one who has made first-hand observations could have conveyed through accurate reporting the essence of the matter as succinctly and clearly.

Mr. Childs has the distinction of having written the only story of its kind that has yet appeared in the American press. By this he has taken the initiative in demonstrating to the Bolivian workers that their problems are worthy of the attention of reputable newspapers and newspapermen in this country.

Underlying the formalities of the Good Neighbor Policy is the need for true and lasting friendliness among the peoples of the Americas, based on the understanding of the basic problems of economic and social security. Mr. Child's article is commendable because it contributes to that understanding.

De Gaulle

How long is it going to take us to learn our most important lesson in world matters; that we cannot treat other peoples like children, and get away with it, and that "me-too" men are a sorry liability in the liberating effort? A proud nation with the democratic background of France cannot be ignored, nor controlled, nor treated with contumely, nor can it be brushed off the map with impunity to our own future safety.

Yes, France lost the battle preceding the disgraceful armistice, but did we also not lose the battle of Washington in 1812 and redeemed our prestige at Chalmette on Louisiana soil, led by the indomitable Andrew Jackson, the man of the hour in those days.

So has France a man of the hour, designated by the Germans as the most brilliant innovator in the French army. His never-say-die qualities should endear him to our own people. Instead of antagonizing De Gaulle, we should call him into our councils to collaborate with Marshall and Eisenhower.

Jefferson's Idea

Apropros of your editorial, "Nemesis of Myopia," in the June 17 edition of The Post, reminded me of a clipping which I found in my father's effects, after his passing, about 48 years ago.

Here it is:

"For us to attempt to reform all Europe and bring them back to the principles of morality and a respect for the equal rights of nations would show us to be maniacs of another character."—Thomas Jefferson.

Road Widening

We have been interested in the letter of Constant Southworth in The Post of June 14 about the devastation caused by the widening of New Mexico ave. near Cathedral ave. We agree completely with his opinion of this devastation, but as property owners near this road we wish to correct his account of what happened.

When the notice of the "Condemnation for widening of Tunlaw Road, New Mexico Avenue and Newark Street," sent from the Board of Commissioners, was received in March, 1942, some of the property owners in this neighborhood held a meeting and expressed strong objection and a committee was appointed to make protest. Letters of protest were also sent individually. Later (May 13, 1942) a public hearing was held before Judge Eicher in District Court No. 4. Some of us attended this hearing and made verbal protests against the road work. When the assessments were received we paid them under written protest.

Over seven months later we received a form postal stating that "exceptions and objections to verdict" were overruled. The authorities were deaf to our protests.

To those of us who care and suffer it seems as if the aim of the construction workers is to cut down as many trees as possible! Somebody shares the responsibility for the vandalism, but not all of us who live near this incredible "benefit," as the assessment terms it.

Commercial Rents

I was interested in your editorial of June 16 on control of commercial rents and particularly in your statement that such rents had been controlled in Hawaii under military government. I have been making a rather extensive study of this subject, and have a copy of the Honolulu ordinance under which residential rents are controlled, but was not aware that control of commercial rents had been undertaken.

You might have mentioned in your editorial the fact that commercial rents have been or are now under control in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Argentina, Brazil, Japan, Germany and various other countries, although not in the United Kingdom. A bill to regulate commercial rents in New York State was introduced in the recent session of the New York Legislature but failed of adoption.

There was one slight inaccuracy in your editorial where you said that "OWM Director Byrnes asked for authority over commercial rents when he took over his present office," and that "he may repeat that request." Actually, Justice Byrnes made that request just after his appointment as Director of the Office of Economic Stabilization, the position now held by Justice Vinson, and the latter is the logical person to be given authority over commercial rentals, if it is not vested in OPA.

Germany's Future

By Paul Winkler

Lessons Of The Past

At moments of great crisis, human minds seem at times to achieve a lucidity which, unfortunately, disappears when the urgency to which they responded is ended.

During the last war, certain simple and basic truths were widely stated during the conflict and then forgotten immediately when the time to apply them came with the peace. Among the men who saw most clearly what lines had to be followed in 1918 were Woodrow Wilson and Leon Bourgeois, who had set forth at length their ideas on the organization of peace, the settlement of the German problem, and the basic principles on which the League of Nations would have to be established.

On the day before the armistice—November 10, 1918—Leon Bourgeois made a speech concerning the League of Nations which has many an application to the problems of today.

As an example of this, take the theory widely spread today that, if nazism could be eliminated, Germany would no longer be a menace to her neighbors. Bourgeois said something quite pertinent to this argument.

"In order that the independence and the security of all nations, large or small, but equal in law, shall be guaranteed against all violence, it is necessary that in each of them the same rule of liberty and of equality under the law shall already be recognized and practiced."

Intent Not Proof

Notice that word "already." Bourgeois meant that the mere expression of the intention of a nation to establish a democracy could not be accepted as sufficient proof of her willingness to cooperate peacefully with her neighbors. She must continue to be regarded with suspicion until such time as she has begun actually to function as a normal democracy, operated by the people themselves and not simply by their governments.

"If in a given country," Bourgeois continued, "a government based solely on force is able to impose its will upon a state, it will not fail, to assure its power, to seek abroad the prestige which military successes will give it." The description fits the Nazi case exactly.

Bourgeois warned, on this eve of armistice:

"We must not allow the wool to be pulled over our eyes by such apparent changes to the constitution of a state as those which the Prince of Baden has proposed to the President of the United States."

This is the crux of the matter. Speaking on September 27, 1918, President Wilson had addressed some extremely pertinent remarks to the Germans. He had explained that "we cannot 'come to terms' with them" because they do not respect terms which they may have accepted: "They observe no covenants, accept no principle but force and their own interest . . . Germany will have to redeem her character, not by what happens at the peace table, but by what follows."

Five Points

Wilson thereupon outlined in five points the principles which must underlie the peace—and six days later, General Lundendorff had Chancellor Prince Max of Baden write Wilson a note accepting the program contained in these five points. These were the "apparent changes to the constitution" to which Bourgeois referred, and they constituted a German offer to "come to terms" with Wilson in spite of his statement that it was impossible to come to terms with a state which accepted engagements with the intention of breaking them whenever it might be convenient.

Wilson did not fall into the trap on this occasion; but this offer served nevertheless as the preamble for later negotiations which resulted in the insufficient guarantees which emasculated the Treaty of Versailles.

Yet there were innumerable warnings against the course that was followed, in violation of many of the guiding principles so clearly expressed earlier. Col. Theodore Roosevelt expressed the earnest hope that the President would accept nothing less than "unconditional surrender." And Leon Bourgeois cried:

"Will it be enough for Germany to overthrow her military government to be considered as having renounced her past? The danger has been created by her very soul as it has been forged since the days of Frederick. It is Germany as a whole who put before the world that unhappily famous formula, Might makes right."

Before Germany could be trusted, Bourgeois warned, she must already have undergone the metamorphosis into democracy. He did not attempt to define the signs by which the genuine transformation could be recognized, for no mere formula of words could successfully describe the spirit; but there could be no doubt that objective and impartial observers would be able to sense the real democracy or anti-democracy of a new Germany.

No one today will maintain that the transformation to which Bourgeois alluded ever took place. Only the illusory Weimer Republic, which masked the preparations for renewed warfare, appeared in Germany. But the warnings Bourgeois had issued against just such a deception were forgotten, the vigilance which should have surrounded Germany was relaxed, and the replacement of clearsightedness and lucidity by blindness and incomprehension set the stage for the present war.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

WPA and PWA to Vanish From U. S. Picture June 30

The two New Deal agencies that gave thousands of the Nation's unemployed a helping hand when they were down and out—the Works Projects Administration and the Public Works Administration — will pass out of existence next week, June 30, to be exact. WPA, the once gigantic relief agency, is now down to 25 persons compared to the several million it had on its rolls at one time. These 25 employes are working on records and their job is about finished. On July 1, they'll be transferred to the office of Maj. Gen. Philip Fleming, Federal Works administrator. PWA has only 10 employes now and next week they'll be switched to the office of Ernest Hall, executive officer of FWA.

And this will be happy news to economy-minded members of Congress: WPA will turn back 130 million dollars to the Treasury, 108 millions out of appropriated funds and 23 millions from its property fund. General Fleming had estimated that only 80 million dollars could be turned back. And PWA next week will release 10 million dollars in appropriated funds. On paper, furthermore, PWA has recorded a nice profit on its bonds. While it was financing work projects, the agency purchased 825 million dollars in bonds from counties and cities which the bankers would not touch. It has sold 700 million dollars of these to RFC, which, in turn, has auctioned off more than 600 hundred million dollars to private purchasers. PWA still holds, on order of the President, about 70 million dollars in public power project bonds. On the bonds sold PWA has made a profit of 15 million dollars, but some of the bonds held by it and RFC are in default.

The Starnes-Scrugham bill is on its way to the White House, where it'll be signed by the President. The last congressional hurdle was cleared when the House accepted the Senate amendments to the bill which would give war veterans preference to have and to hold Federal jobs. Now the Civil Service Commission is drafting regulations under which the bill will operate. A special meeting to discuss the rules was held the other day by the Council of Personnel Administration and another session will be held today. An undetermined question is whether a war service veteran can be put in the job of a career employe . . . UNRRA is taking over another floor from Office of Civilian Defense at the DuPont Circle Building . . . Veterans Administration is demanding a sizable building here to house its proposed regional office. None has been found. It's construction division will be moved to the old postoffice a t14t hand U sts. nw.

This is a friendly tip to the tens of thousands of night workers who are paid a differential and who stand to collect several millions in back overtime pay from Uncle Sam: Don't spent the money before you get it. Frankly, you may never see it. More than one member of Congress is riled over the Comptroller General's decision, which apparently will compel the Government to refigure the overtime pay of night workers who are paid a differential, usually 15 per cent, back to 1934 and they're threatening to do somethin' about it. The decision will force Federal agencies to figure overtime pay on base pay plus the differential. They have been paying overtime on the flat day rate. In Washington, thousands at the Navy Yard, Alexandria Torpedo Plant, Government Printing Office, and possibly the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are involved.

The decision, an official estimated, would raise the salary of the average night worker who was paid a differential by $150 a year. This would be a substantial nest-egg for the few people who have been working nights since 1934. However, it now appears that Navy, War, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and other agencies apparently affected by the decision will ask the Comptroller General to rule specifically on their pay schedule. And if the comptroller extends his decision in the GPO case to all other agencies the matter will be dropped into the lap of Congress. No agency can escape this as they must go back to Congress to get the money to pay the back overtime. And Congress—it's widely predicted—will pass a law which will offset the comptroller's decision. It did this precise thing a few weeks back in a similar case that involved several hundred people at the Bureau of Engraving.

Senator Vandenberg (R. Mich.) has revived the Committee for Congested Production Areas. He believes it has done a splendid job in war-crowded cities . . . Government Girls will be honored tonight by Coca-Cola's spotlight band at the Shot from the Sky show. You're all invited . . . Agriculture's American Legion Post already has sent 1500 chessmen and 138 books on chess to our war prisoners in Germany. Its goal is 1000 sets. H. H. Holland is chairman of the drive for funds . . . B. M. Joffe is now assistant director of administrative management at WLB in addition to budget officer . . . Joe Roeder, 27, of Brooklyn, who lost both legs in North African battles, is now dispatcher of cars at Walter Reed.

Monocacy Bridge to Be Finished After War

MARYLAND'S NEW highway bridge over the Monocacy River, 3 miles east of Frederick on U. S. Rt. 40, has been listed for completion as a postwar project by the State Roads Commission. Contractors have completed piers of the new bridge, and the superstructure will be erected when steel is again available. Meanwhile, a temporary bridge is in use.

Va. Hatcheries' Expansion Era Is Seen at End

Richmond, Va., June 21 (AP).—Operations during May of this year of commercial hatcheries in Virginia with a decline from May last year of 53 per cent in both eggs set and chicks hatched, marked the end of a five-year expansion in the industry and the beginning of an apparent downward trend, the Virginia Cooperative Crop Reporting service's hatchery production report shows.

During the five-year period, the output of chicks in Virginia more than trebled. During the first few months of this year the output continued to increase. Diminishing feed supplies and less favorable feeding ratios are listed in the report as the reasons for the decline.

State hatcherymen set 2,550,000 eggs in May 1944 compared with 5,480,000 egs set in May of last year. They hatched 3,225,000 chicks compared with 6,881,000 in May 1943.

Many State hatcheries already have closed for the summer, and the report on chicks booked for future delivery shows only 20 per cent as many on order as at this time last year.

Turkey hatcheries reported during May a 17 per cent increase in eggs set and a 16 per cent increase in poults hatched over May a year ago.

All sections of the Nation show smaller hatches compared with a year ago, an exact decrease of 29 per cent.

1043 Veterans 'Processed' At Fort Meade

Fort George G. Meade, June 21 (AP).—A record group of 1043 veterans of overseas fighting was on the way today to various homes in Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, or the District of Columbia after processing at Fort Meade.

Meade officials said the reception center has designed its system of processing returned soldiers to make as easy as possible their transition to home surroundings and wartime changes. The combat veterans are rushed through with a streamlined program which prepares them for life in the United States again in anywhere from a few minutes to 24 hours.

Many Need New Outfits

One of the main services at the station was reported as the outfitting of the returned servicemen Many need almost entirely new outfits. Shoe certificates are given for those who need new shoes and pointers are given on the ration system, since many left before the system was fully established.

An officer tells the veteran of other changes in civilian life and he is warned that he will not get some of the things he was formerly accustomed to because of wartime shortages and curtailed services.

Catch Up With Payroll

Here, too, the soldiers get a chance to catch up with the payroll. Many of them have been paid here for months of service overseas when they were too busy to sign payrolls.

After passing through the processing mill, battle veterans get a 21-day-plus traveling-time delay en route, after which they report to a reassignment center.

The Fort Meade station, serving the Third Service Command area, is one of 14 of its kind throughout the United States.

State to Aid Drive Against Slot Machine

Richmond, Va., June 21 (AP).—Governor Darden announced today that a State law-enforcement group will be provided to assist local authorities in conducting a drive against slot machines in Virginia.

The Governor said he expects to obtain the services of an attorney and a group of investigators to do the work, and added that he will call upon the ABC board's inspectors as well as State police to furnish data.

"I don't want to remove law enforcement from the localities," the Governor said, "and for this reason, I am moving to set up an agency that can help them."

During his campaign, and in his inaugural address, the Governor was outspoken against slot machines and recommended amendment of the law to impose stiff penalties for the operation of "these gambling devices, in which the odds are hopelessly against the player."

During the General Assembly in 1942, the law was amended to make it mandatory that a wine and beer license be forfeited by any licensee operating a gambling device. The Governor said it was a common knowledge that some proprietors had given up their wine and beer licenses in favor of the more profitable slot machine business.

Attorneys Seek to Remove Harrison From 'Death Row'

Richmond, Va., June 21 (AP).—Counsel for Walter Paul Harrison, who was granted a writ of error by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals in Wytheville yesterday, today conferred on plans for making application for a bail which would remove the 32-year-old former streetcar motorman from death row at the State penitentiary.

Harrison had been slated to go to the electric chair Friday on conviction of murder in the drowning of his 30-year-old wife. Harrison's four sons were drowned with Mrs. Harrison, when the family automobile rolled into a water-filled quarry near Stop 8½, Petersburg Pike.

Since January 15, Harrison, tried solely on the charge he murdered his wife, has been held in death row of the penitentiary.

The higher court yesterday granted the writ, which means that Supreme Court justices will review the cases and permit both defense counsel and the prosecution attorney to argue the errors alleged in a 40-page petition for appeal. After argument of counsel, which probably will take place at Staunton during the September term of court, the justices will announce their decision in the case on opinion day of the October term of court in Richmond.

One of three decisions may be reached (1) The court may affirm the death sentence verdict and order Harrison executed (2) The court may reverse the death sentence verdict and remand the case to Hustings Court, Part II, for a new trial (3) The court may dismiss the charges and declare Harrison a free man.

Meanwhile, the attorneys for Harrison, A. Clair Sager, Leith Bremner and J. M. Turner will probably appear shortly before Justice Edward Hudgins to request the setting of bail, which would free the defendant until final decision is reached.

Tryout Scheduled

B & O Adopts 2-Way Radio At Baltmiore

Baltimore, June 21 (AP).—A. S. Hunt, communications superintendent for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, said today the new two-way radio communication system was expected to be in operation throughout the Baltimore yards by the first of next week.

The system will be used only in expediting the daily movement of thousands of freight cars in the local yard, Hunt reported. It is eventually to be used over the entire railroad.

Preliminary tests of dispatcher-to-train radio communication will be made in the Baltimore B. & O. yards within the next few days.

A transmitter has been installed in the yardmaster's office, and receiving sets and small transmitters will be installed in several yard engines. The immediate effect of the operation will be the speeding up of freight-car movement in the yards, Hunt disclosed.

Newest Draft Assignment Plan Outlined

Richmond, Va., June 21 (AP).—Circulars outlining the new procedure whereby men inducted after July 1 will be subject to assignment to either land or naval forces instead of being assigned to the Army or Navy at the time of pre-induction physical examination have been mailed to local draft boards, Col. Mills F. Neal, State director of Selective Service, announced yesterday.

Allocation of men to the Army or Navy will be made at the time of induction beginning July 1, and all registrants who have had pre-induction physical examination and have been found fit for Army or Navy duty will be considered "acceptable to the armed forces" and may be selected to fill combined calls, Colonel Neal said.

Local boards will continue under the new procedure until July 1 to fill calls for the Army or Navy on the basis of certificates of fitness received by the men. Effective with the July call, the calls will be combined and issued as one call for the armed forces instead of having separate calls for the Army and Navy, the Selective Service director explained.

All registrants forwarded for preinduction physical examination and found fit for military service are being designated as acceptable for "general military service" or "limited military service" without being specifically designated for the Army or Navy, under the new regulations.

Selective Service officials said it was probable that many boards will have men after July 1 who hold certificates of fitness for either the Army or the Navy issued under the old regulations. It was suggested to the boards that they inform these men that they are subject to assignment upon induction to either the Army or the Navy, regardless of the old certificates of fitness.

Nazi 'Flying Bombs' Indicate Luftwaffe Defeat, Martin Says

Baltimore, June 21 (AP).—The use of flying bombs by the Nazis "is a sign to me that the Luftwaffe has met defeat," Airplane Builder Glenn L. Martin declared today, saying the Germans no longer can risk planes and fliers from a dwindling pilot pool.

At the same time, the head of the Glenn L. Martin Co. predicted in an interview that "we can expect automatic flying bombs to have great range in the next war.

"They will be capable of coming from Europe to America and will have a 5000 mile range, but no one would know where they would land because of the inability to compute variable winds."

Remarking that the jet-propelled devices, while inaccurate, "spell total war against every living thing," Martin continued:

"It is my guess that the Nazis have been defeated in getting into the areas against which they now are using such weapons, and they turn to this method as a result of this defeat. They have always hit populations generally. We have always chosen our targets."

Martin also commented that the flying bomb, launched with the aid of rockets against England, "deals only with area bombing and is not considered an important weapon.

"An automatic flying bomb must assume a target area 3 miles or so in diameter when operated at present short ranges; at vastly enlarged target areas as ranges increase. We have not seen fit to use such an indiscriminate weapon.

"The Tactical Board has not thought enough of it to do anything with it."

Soft Wheat Pours Into Va. Mills

Richmond, Va., June 21 (AP).—Virginia's new crop of soft red winter wheat—estimated at more than 10 million bushels and the highest on record since 1931—is pouring into mills in Richmond and throughout the State in such vast quantities that trucks are having day-long waits before they can be unloaded.

"The quality of the wheat is excellent," W. D. Saunders, secretary of the Richmond Grain Exchange, said today. "It is the first soft wheat we have had on the market since last year, because there was a scarcity in 1943. We had to use hard wheat all year after January, when it ran out."

Submarine Song Written by Mother At Cottage City

Cottage City, Md., June 21 (Spl.). Mrs. A. K. Theibault, whose son is serving on a submarine in the Pacific, has written a song dedicated to that branch of the service. With her song, Mrs. Theibault feels she has caught the spirit of the underwater men from her son whose enthusiasm for the service inspired her.

The song, as yet unpublished and still in original manuscript form, was first dedicated to her son, Albert Reynolds Theibault, E. M. 2/c, aged 21, now on a 30-day furlough at home. He, however, has insisted that she dedicate it to all the men of the submarine services of the United Nations.

The words, copyrighted and published by permission, are:

Hail to the men of the submarines,
Those daring young sailors in blue
Who go down in the heart of the ocean deep
Fighting for home and you.
They'll make Tojo remember Pearl Harbor
And keep liberty's banners in view,
And when the war is done and the victory is won
Their story can then be told
Of how they kept all the glow in Old Glory,
Our men of the submarines.

"NOW I UNDERSTAND RUSSIA!"
REVOLUTIONS IN RUSSIA
THEIR LESSONS FOR THE WESTERN WORLD
By G. R. Treviranus
WHAT THIS BOOK TELLS YOU—
1 It gives a vivid account of revolutionary history in Russia in the last 150 years.
2 It supplies an incisive appraisal of the great personages of yesterday and today.
3 It condenses the fascinating story of modern Russia.
4 It presents the key to Russia's problem of the future.
5 It deflates many popular misconceptions about Bolshevism and Communism in Russia.
6 It tells us why democracies have nothing to fear from Russia if their leaders take a firm and honest stand on peace terms.
"WHO writes of Russia must use a long pen, or at least a sharp mind, if he is to avoid the pitfalls into which so many have fallen so often . . . Through a happy combination of virtues, Revolutions in Russia avoids all the pitfalls and achieves something even more remarkable: a new and useful contribution to current knowledge of the past and present of the U.S.S.R. Here is neither a panegyric nor an indictment nor yet a travelogue, but rather a historical resume and interpretation of revolutionary politics (and economics) in the Eurasian heartland . . . solid and stimulating . . . an accurate and level-headed treatise." — Frederick L. Schuman, N. Y. Times Book Review, Illustrated.

Nats Beat Yanks, 6-4, After Losing First, 4-3

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

New York, June 21.—A new outfielder has joined the Yankees and they won't have to tell him how to make plays. He's 43-year-old Johnny Cooney, the Methuselah of the majors, who has grown old so slowly he's the best defensive outfielder on the club.

POVICH

They picked him up from Brooklyn the other day. The Dodgers, forced to cut down to the player limit, gave Cooney his release. President Ed Barrow of the Yankees, signed him. Barrow was rectifying a mistake he made 24 years ago when he didn't sign Cooney. That's a story that Dan Parker, of the Mirror, tells.

Back in 1920, Cooney was a kid pitcher for the Williamantic Thread Co. team in Connecticut. He shut out the Red Sox in an exhibition game and Barrow, then manager of the Sox, was interested. With Eddie McQuinley, an old catcher who appointed himself Cooney's mentor in the negotiations with the Red Sox, Cooney made the trip to Boston to talk terms.

They agreed on a $400 purchase price. Barrow started to write out a check. "We're not taking any checks," said McQuinley. "I've seen checks bounce." Barrow, in a jovian rage, chased them both out of the office. They walked over to the Braves park and when the Braves displayed $500 in cash, Cooney signed.

That's how Cooney, a great ballplayer for 24 years, was lost to the American League. He has been one of the fellows the players think about when they talk of ballplayers' ballplayer. Cooney's father played for Pop Anson's Chicago Colts. His brother, Jimmy, jr., was a shortstop with the Cubs. His father-in-law, one Daughtery, is a former big leaguer.

Before he turned to outfielding, Cooney was a left-handed pitcher. John McGraw thought quite well of him. In 1923, McGraw offered to trade the Braves' Bill Terry for Cooney. The Braves thought quite well of him and turned the deal down. Then Cooney chipped the elbow in his pitching arm. An operation left one arm shorter than the other and his pitching career was ended.

But Cooney wasn't through as a ballplayer. He went to Indianapolis and said he'd try playing the outfield. As a pitcher, he always was a pretty good hitter. At Indianapolis, all he did was lead the American Association in hitting.

Casey Stengel brought Cooney to Brooklyn when he got the manager's job. Then he went to the Cards in a big player swap. The Cards tried to send him to the minors. He showed 'em some profitable Texas oil stocks he had bought and told the Cards they couldn't send him anywhere except to another major league club. They released him and he caught on with the Braves.

During the last decade or so, one of the prime debates in the National League was whether Terry Moore or Johnny Cooney was the best defensive outfielder. It was a tight fit. Cooney wasn't quite as spectacular as the acrobatic Moore, but he made all the plays. He was a loper, like Joe DiMaggio, who covered all the ground and made the catches look easy.

Cooney was a regular with the Braves for 10 years, though never a power hitter. In fact, he hit only two home runs during his major league career. There's a story about those, too. They were both hit at the Polo Grounds and on successive days. "I was just in a home-run streak," Cooney smiled.

A few years ago, in Florida, the Nats had an arrangement with Joe Stripp, operator of a baseball school at Orlando, whereby in return for $500 the Washington club would have first choice of any two graduates of the school.

The Nats used to send Scout Joe Cambria to look over Stripp's lads and make the selections. Cambria watched the players for a week and decided to sign a first baseman he liked. He was undecided about his other choice. He consulted Stripp.

"How about that fellow out in center field?" Cambria asked Stripp. "He may be the one I'll take. I kinda like his action." Cambria inquired about the outfielder's habits, his background, etc.

"He's a nice fellow," said Stripp. "Well behaved and everything. I'll call him in and you can talk to him."

Stripp did, and the outfielder came loping in. Stripp introduced them. "This is Mr. Cambria," he said. "Mr. Cambria, here's that outfielder you liked. Name's Johnny Cooney, one of my instructors here. He has nice action."

Griffs in Tie For Cellar With Tribe

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

New York, June 21.—The Nats did things by halves today. They got themselves half the honors in a twin bill with the Yankees and they also got themselves half ownership of the American League cellar.

At 4 p. m., the Nats had undisputed right to eighth place after flunking out, 4-3, in the first game of the double-header, but later in the day they got a grip on themselves and took a 6-4 victory from the Yanks. That last effort netted them a tie with Cleveland for eighth place.

Mickey Haefner let the first game get away after taking a 3-1 lead into the seventh inning. Johnny Lindell's three-bagger tied the score and George Stirnweiss' three-bagger won the ball game in the eighth.

Got Grip on Themselves

The Nas got their grip on themselves later in the day and won the second game with the help of a five-run first inning against Southpaw Joe Page. After George Case singled, Page walked three men in a row, forcing home a run before his own wild throws over third let in one. Mike Guerra tripled to center for two more and then stole home to the great embarrassment of Rookie Pitcher Steve Roser, who had replaced Page.

Milo Candini all but pitched away his 5-0 lead in the first five innings. He gave up two runs right off the bat on a walk and two hits and in the fifth he yielded two more, on only one hit. He walked two, and the second run scored on a double-steal by Metheny and Rosenthal. That cut the Nats lead to 5-4.

Nats Asked to Lead

In the eighth, however, the Nats reenforced their advantage with a run made from Johnny Sullivan's two-bagger and Hillis Layne's single.

The Yanks after their fifth-inning scoring got nothing, but Roger Wolff had to come to the rescue of Candini, who after hitting one batter and walking another with only one out in the eighth, looked too shaky to finish.

In all the Nats gleaned 10 hits off the New York pitching while the Yanks got but six in the nightcap.

Nats Were Feeble

That first game was a pretty feeble demonstration by the Nats, who couldn't stir up any kind of a hit with runners in scoring position. Two of their three runs were scored despite themselves. They were forced in. The only time they drove a run across the plate was when Stan Spence banged his seventh homer of the year into the right-field seats in the fourth inning with the bases empty.

Spence's blow set Haefner up in a 1-0 lead and the Yanks tied the score in the fifth with two out when Stirnweiss pushed a clever squeeze but past Haefner to score Hemsley from third.

In the sixth, the Nats made another one but they ouldn't be very proud of it. They filled the bases against Donald with none out on Kuhel's single, a walk to Spence and Vosmik's infield single. Kuhel was cut down at the plate on Layne's tap to Grimes, and the Nats ame up with a run when Donald walked Ferrell. But with the bases still filled and ony one out, they got no more, because Sullivan took a third strike and Haefner tapped out.

Nats Flunk Again

When the Nats made a 3-1 in the seventh, they agan muffed a big inning. Case singled, Torres was hit and Spence walked, filling the bases with one out. Johnny Johnson got the pithing job and passed Vosmik to walk a run home. Then the Nats flunked out again when Layne hit into a double play.

Johnny Lindell tied the game up at 3-3 in the seventh with a triple to the left field wall after Metheny and Cooney had singled, and in the eighth, with Haefner still pitching for some reason, the Yanks won the ball game. Grimes led off with a double to right, but was wiped out at third on Milosevich's bunt. With two out, Stirnweiss tripled to left to get Milosevich homed.

In the ninth the Nats came up with another empty threat. Torres' infield single and Kuhel's walk put the tying and winning runs on with one out, whereupon Spence and Vosmik left 'em there with a pair of easy outs. Jim Turner, who came into the game in the seventh, was the winning pitcher.

The Tigers used five pitchers, Johnny Gorsica submitting to his sixth defeat, while Ed Kileman, second of three Cleveland pitchers, received his fourth victory.

Rudy York belted his seventh homer of the season, a three-run drive in the first inning and Mickey Rocco goth his fourth round tripper in the ninth. Rookie Paul O'Dea had a perfect day for the tribe with four hits.

Macks Defeat Bosox Behind Flores, 5 to 2

Philadelphia, June 21 (AP).—The Philadelphia Athletics, led by Dick Siebert's slugging, beat out their third straight victory over the Bosover two runs in the sixth to break a 2-to-2 tie and then went on to win 5 to 2 before 2024 fans.

Siebert teamed up with Jess Flores to spark the As. He drove in three of the Mackmen's runs, belting a single in the first and the winning marker with two on in the sixth.

Flores, recording his third win of the year, held the Red Sox to only three hits in the last six innings. The win put the As in undisputed sixth place.

Frank Hayes' single, Siebert's double and George Kell's one-bagger in the sixth broke the tie as the Mackmen added two runs to run the score to 4 to 2.

The Red Sox scored their first run as Bob Johnson got a lucky double when the wind blew his fly away from Joe Rullo and he crossed on Joe Cronin's single. The second tally came in the third on Clem Hausmann's single, Skeeter Newsome's sacrifice and Pete Fox's double.

Mardi Gras Wins Top at Charles Town

By a Special Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 21.—C. P. Sowers' Mardi Gras, a son of Happy Time, who once was so lame it was recommended he be destroyed, continued to show his running guns by winning the Fayette Purse, featuring the Wednesday program here for Army and Navy relief and West Virginia charities. Mardi Gras, capably handled by Jockey Sammy Palumbo, turned back Mrs. Thomas Lewis' Big Talk, the odds-on favorite, by a neck margin. Two lengths behind the thrilling battle for first money came the Palmetto Stable's Post War Style to be third. Only three others competed in the dash of about 4½ furlongs.

With Big Talk drawing the chief support, Mardi Gras returned a $7.60 mutuel after stepping the abbreviated distance in a creditable 50 3-5 over a track labeled good by the chart crew.

Big Talk and Mardi Gras ran as a team from the break. The Lewis colorbearer set the pace on the inside while Palumbo, after urging Mardi Gras, rated the veteran into the stretch. In the straightaway, Mardi Gras was placed to pressure, and he disposed of his rival in the final strides. Post War Style was off poorly, moved up menacingly, but lost her chance by going wide into the stretch.

The results board sagged with prices after two extreme outsiders finished first and second in the opening event. Feeling High, owned by John Bosley, jr., was the winner in a photo and paid $71.80, $60.80 and $18.40. Norman Corbin's Fleetest was second at $41.40 and $19.60 with the favorite, John Morris' Chat Hopkins third at $3.

The daily double on Feeling High and J. L. Friedman's Jack's Star, the $6 winner of the second race, paid $169.20.

BETWEEN RACES . . . Without comment, the stewards announced today that the 10 day suspension given Jockey Frank Sheaffer had been modified to a $100 fine. Perhaps the shortage of experienced riders here was a foctor. Apprentice Bobby Edens was slightly ill after training hours this morning and cancelled his mounts for the day. To June 19, 85 races here were decided by three-quarters of a length or less. Sixteen were nose nose finishes. Buddy Root is nearing his record of 73 winners at this track established last summer. Town Hall, now at Delawaze Park, and Honeymaid are the only horses to win five races here this season. "Huppy" Davis horses have been showing the results of his patient method of training. However, once they are in shape he sends them into action with regularity. Five years ago he set some kind of a record by running Huppy an average of three times a week for the season. The horse hitched by the clubhouse and ridden by one of the patrol judges is the Tennessee walking horse purchased this spring by Mrs. A. J. Boyle.

Palace Offers Superb Film in 'White Cliffs'

WHEN "THE WHITE CLIFFS OF DOVER" opens this morning on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater, Washington filmgoers will be privileged to see another Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer master-picture of the same high quality of excellence in both conception and execution as "Mrs. Miniver" and "Random Harvest."

Adapted from the poem by the late Alice Duer Miller, "The White Cliffs" concerns itself with the problems of the peoples of two nations—the United States and England—caught in the maelstrom of two wars, and their reactions to common heritages expressed through a small and intimate group of intelligent, interesting and ingratiating characters.

It is a drama of great sentimental and emotional sweep that Claudine West, Jan Lustig and George Froeschel have derived from the Miller poem, excerpts of which are recited as a commentary to bridge the time lapses in the movement of the far-flung story.

It also is a drama not averse to dealing frankly with the superficial differences between us and the British, or making the point that early clashes of viewpoints and customs, by the exercise of patience, tolerance and understanding, may be welded into strong bonds of affection and respect.

If there is an implication of politics or international relationships in this, it is so inconspicuously and logically developed from the characters and incidents in the play as to disarm objection.

Story of Woman's Life

The action revolves around the life of Susan Dunn, who accompanies her American newspaper-publisher father to England in 1914 for an ostensible fortnight and remains there for the ensuing 30 years.

Those three decades encompass her whirlwind wooing by Sir John Ashwood, the early difficulties of adjusting herself to the English way of life, Sir John's death in the First World War, the birth of their son and Susan's determination that never shall he be called upon to face the tragedy visited on her and his father.

With the coming of the present war, the call to arms and her boy's sailing away to the horrors of Dieppe, the courage that has faced such crises on both sides of the Atlantic can do no less than dedicate itself to the pledge that such a thing never again shall bring its curse to mankind twice in one generation.

Rich in Variety

This dramatic basis of the play is embellished with the full resources of one of the world's largest studios, superb acting by a distinguished cast, and a million gentle and home little touches that give it warmth, humanness and depth, under the productional guidance of Sidney Franklin and the direction of Clarence Brown.

There are many scenes of infinite beauty and others of great poignance. Some are emotionally stirring, even to a chilled-steel heart. There are, too, humor, excitement, a brief examination of the youthful Nazi mind and a full play of adult and juvenile romance to compound fullness and variety.

In the role of Susan, Irene Dunne, without recourse to song, contributes by far the most eloquent and most moving performance she has ever brought to the screen. It raises her stature high among contemporary actresses. Alan Marshal, as Sir John Ashwood I, plays with vigor and intelligence and is succeeded during the period of the action by Roddy McDowall and Peter Lawford, respectively, as Sir John II, as boy and young man.

Supplementaries Limited

Frank Morgan, as Hiram Porter Dunn, Sir C. Aubrey Smith, Van Johnson, in a brief and not too important part; Dame May Whitty, Gladys Cooper, John Warburton, Jill Esmond and Brenda Forbes are among other able players who add so richly to the balance and power of an exceptional bit of screencraft.

Despite the fact that Miss Dunne does no singing, one of "The White Cliffs" major assets is its background of military and reminiscent airs, contrived with extraordinary skill by Herbert Stothart.

Since "The White Cliffs of Dover" runs to greater length than the average picture, the supplementary screen attractions for the new week at the Palace are restricted to the single-reel "Romance of Celluloid" and the latest issue of the picturized "News of the Day."

Meat 'All Lit Up' But It's Fit to Eat, Official Rules

Mexia, Tex., June 21 (U.P.)—Pseudomanas phosphorescens was to blame all the time.

When a frightened Negro rushed to police headquarters and cried that the meat in his refrigerator was "all lit up," police called in health authorities, who found that the meat glowed in the dark. It tested fit for human consumption, however, and persons who ate it were not made ill.

Tonight Dr. J. S. Watson, city sanitarian, said that meat sold by five butcher shops contained the minute organisms, which thrive in damp and cold places.

The glowing meat, he said, is not dangerous, but he advised housewives to wash all meat in vinegar.

Boom in Postwar Retail Trade Predicted to Arlington Body

Arlington, Fairfax Bureau of The Post. Arlington, Va. Tel. CH. 3239.

Speaking on "Postwar Opportunities for Retailing," before the membership meeting Tuesday of the Arlington Chamber of Commerce, Arthur B. Gunnerson, of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, detailed effects of government controls on the economy of the nation.

"The policy of the Government with respect to the continuance of these controls and regulations after the war must be considered by businessmen in making plans for the postwar period," Gunnerson said. He also said "that retail merchants in the postwar period undoubtedly will have to merchandise some 30 to 40 per cent more goods each year than during any time in the past."

"Since this expansion of business will necessitate enlargement of store facilities, retail merchants and businessmen should begin as soon as possible making definite plans for their increase in business."

W. Morrell Stone, president of the chamber, told of the public hearings which the Virginia Sales Tax Commission will begin holding, starting in Richmond June 26. Since it appears a hearing will be held in northern Virginia, perhaps in Alexandria, the Arlington Chamber will postpone presenting its opposition to a sales tax until the hearing in this area.

Amazing results in building STURDY BODIES!

1—Promote the flow of vital digestive juices in the stomach

2—Energize your body with RICH, RED BLOOD!

YOUNG people, especially those of grammar and high school age, are prone to be deficient in stomach digestive juices and red-blood.

A growing-person who is operating on a 65 to 70% healthy blood volume or a stomach digestive capacity of only 50 to 60% normal is severely handicapped.

In such cases Nature needs extra help. Organic troubles or focal infection, if they exist, must be corrected. Tissue foods must be digested and rich, red-blood must be present to build sturdy bodies.

S.S.S. Tonic is especially designed (1) to promote the flow of VITAL DIGESTIVE JUICES in the stomach which digest the food so the body can make proper use of it in tissue building and repair and (2) to build-up BLOOD STRENGTH when deficient.

These two important results enable the body to make use of the food as Nature intended. Thus you may gain a keen appetite . . . firm flesh . . . body energy . . . mental alertness!

Build Sturdy Health and Help America Win

Thousands and thousands of users have testified to the benefits S.S.S. Tonic has brought to them and scientific research shows that it gets results—that's why so many say "S.S.S. Tonic builds sturdy health—makes you feel like yourself again." At drug stores in 10 and 20 oz. sizes. S.S.S. Co.

Alexandria Gets $236,234 In Bond Drive

The Fifth War Loan campaign in Alexandria, dedicated to the city's ranking military resident, Lieut. Gen. Carl A. Spaatz of the Army Air Forces, reached $236,234 yesterday in the drive for a total of $2,450,000, according to official figures released by J. Paul Tribles, public relations chairman.

Corporation bond purchases of $25,000 were reported by the corporations division chairman, Clarence J. Robinson, to William G. Illich, war loan chairman. At the same time it was pointed out that only official figures certified by the Federal Reserve Bank in Richmond, Va., are being used to report totals, and that an allocation of $75,000 in bonds to be purchased by a New York firm cannot be included in the Alexandria drive until cleared in Richmond by the Federal Reserve.

Three out-of-town firms which credited purchases to the Alexandria campaign this week are Richmond Greyhound Lines, $10,000; the Hecht Co. of Washington, $10,000, and Jelleff's, Inc., $5000.

A reminder was issued by the committee that "E" bond purchases by individual buyers are required to assure the success of the drive. Alexandria was lagging by only 1 per cent in the national average of 14 per cent for individual purchases in the drive for an "E" bond quota of $975,000, as latest figures reached $118,987.50.

At the Fruit Growers Express Co. in Alexandria, L. D. Morris, chairman of bond sales, reported that purchases by employes have reached $3775. Assisting Morris as committee members are E. C. Bevers, R. R. Hooker, Ray D. Godfrey and C. K. Collum.

IX
The friends of this, that and the other,
From King Carol to the flying goose,
Bombard me with their propaganda,
With paper they are most profuse.

X
I get reports from worthy bodies,
In language dull and most verbose,
Who reads them? Though they be important,
Too much good paper they engross.

XI
I spend my days in tearing open
A lot of dreary envelopes,
A hurried glancing at the letters,
And the trash box holds their author's hopes.

XII
I often ask myself the question
Why writers for this fate should slave,
And why should paper thus be wasted,
Is it for this I save and save?

Miss Elizabeth Fenton de Lashmutt, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Donald de Lashmutt of Rockville, Md., became the bride of William H. McKinnell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. White orchids completed the bride's all-white ensemble. Mrs. Einslow Renshawe, sister of the bride, served as matron of honor, and Miss Anne Bouie, Rockville, was bridesmaid. The former wore pale blue, white accessories and a corsage of white gardenias, and the one bridesmaid chose aqua silk jersey, white accessories and a corsage of yellow roses.

Corpl. Winslow Renshawe served as best man. Ushers were Jack Dixon on Catonsville, Mel J. Hartley and Henry Roplawski of Baltimore.

A reception followed at the Francis Scott Key Hotel in Frederick. Later Mr. and Mrs. McKinnell left for a short wedding trip.

Lieutenant Haynes gave the bride in marriage. She wore a white mousseline de soie gown with lace mitts and as her only ornament an heirloom cameo pin which belonged to her grandmother. Her small white hat was fashioned of veiling and she carried a bouquet of spring flowers tied with blue ribbon.

Let Ingenuity Glamorize Those Everyday Beverages

The hostess who knows how to blend an iced beverage is popular with both kiddies and grownups. It is that seldom-used ingredient—originality—that makes the difference between a delightful drink and a passing pleasant one.

Martha Ellyn

A small addition to milk makes the "duty drink" of children a taste adventure. Even an adult responds to a pick-up in the way of a well-blended and chilled drink. It may take but the addition of fragrant mint leaves to tea, or a scoop of ice cream to a milk beverage to elevate it to new heights.

"I am having my 5-year-old daughter's friends in for a party; what shall I give them to drink?" This is a request I often receive. Milk drinks may be varied with ingredients and flavors. These are good to taste and good for children. Grownups will like the drinks as well as the kiddies.

Many a delicious beverage is based upon milk, cream, buttermilk—others include ice cream or fruit ices as components. Make up some of the simple-to-prepare, but oh-so-good, milk beverages for which the recipes are given here and you'll have both youngsters and oldsters clamoring for seconds.

FRUIT MILK SHRUB

Crush berries to make ¼ cup pulp and juice. Combine with 3 tablespoons orange juice, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 to 3 tablespoons sugar, depending upon the sweetness of the berries, a few grains of salt. Pour in 1 cup chilled milk and beat all with rotary beater. Pour into a cold glass and serve at once. Serves 1.

ORANGE GINGER FREEZE

Place 1 pint orange ice in six tall iced beverage glasses. Add enough gingerale to fill the glasses. Garnish with sprigs of mint, orange slices cut in half. Serves 6.

RASPBERRY CUSTARD DRINK

Beat 2 eggs slightly. Add ¼ cup sugar, few grains salt, 1 quart milk and mix well. Cook over hot water, stirring constantly until the mixture coats the spoon. Add ¼ teaspoon almond flavoring and chill in refrigerator. Add ½ cup crushed raspberries sprinkled with powdered sugar. Serves 4.

CUBAN BUTTERMILK

Peel 1 large ripe banana and mash with a fork. Add ½ cup crushed raspberries, 3 tablespoons sugar and 1 teaspoon lemon juice and mix well. Add 6 cups chilled buttermilk and stir until well mixed and serve. Serves 6.

ORANGE RASPBERRY LEMONADE

Put 1 pint lemon ice in 6 tall glasses. Combine 2 cups orange juice, ½ cup lemon juice and 2 cups cold water. Sweeten if desired and pour over the lemon ice. Add ½ cup raspberries. Serves 6.

TANTALIZING REFRESHER for both old and young is fruit milk shrub pictured here. A tangy accompaniment is crisp cheese straws. Whatever the ingredients used to make a cold beverage, be sure to put the "chill" in it and present in the most attractive manner possible

Michelses Leave Sunday; Honored at Many Parties

The many well-wishing friends of the retiring Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels, eager to entertain for them before they leave, have forced them to delay until Sunday their departure scheduled for today. Meanwhile parties keep piling up on their already crowded calendar.

Yesterday Senora de Michels and her daughter, Senorita Cristina, were entertained by Mrs. Dennis Chavez, wife of the Senator from New Mexico, who invited a company of 50 for luncheon in the Chinese Room of the Mayflower. Last night the Charge d'Affaires of Peru and Senora de Garland gave a dinner for the Ambassador and Senora de Michels and their daughter. And in the late afternoon Senorita Michels was guest of honor at a small cocktail party given by Miss Emily French Myers.

Mrs. Henry Wallace, wife of the Vice President, was ranking guest at Mrs. Chavez's luncheon and among others in the company were Senora de Castillo Najera, wife of the Mexican Ambassador; Senora de Escalante, wife of the Venezuelan Ambassador; Senora de Caceres, wife of the Honduran Ambassador; Senora de Blanco, wife of the Ambassador of Uruguay; Mrs. Guy Gillette, wife of Senator Gillette; the Misses Ida and Pauletta Guffey; the daughters of the hostess, Mrs. Stanley Miller and Miss Maria Gloria Chavez.

The Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins and the Argentine Ambassador, Dr. Adrian Escobar, were in the company entertained by Dr. and Senora de Garland at dinner. The group of young people at Miss Myers' fete included Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Walter R. Amesbury, jr., Senor and Senora Manuel Trucco, Comdr. Juan Benavides of the Peruvian Air Corps, and Senora de Benavides, Capt. Manuel Martinez Castro and Senora de Martinez Castro, the Commercial Attache of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Illanes, Senorita Sylvia Brull, Senorita Cristine Brull and Miss Marcia O'Brien.

Today the Minister Attache of the Spanish Embassy and Senora de Danis will fete the Ambassador and Senora de Michels at a farewell luncheon and this evening they will be honor guests of Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim at dinner.

Frieda Miller Is Appointed To Labor Post

By the United Press

President Roosevelt today nominated Miss Frieda S. Miller, former N. Y. State industrial commissioner, as director of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor to succeed Miss Mary Anderson who is resigning at 71 after 25 years in the post.

Delegate to Conference

Miss Miller has been a factory inspector and a director of New York's division of women in industry as well as one of the two women to be New York commissioner. The other was Frances Perkins, now Secretary of Labor.

Miss Miller serving as a special assistant at the United States Embassy in London, returned to this country to take part in the International Labor Organizations sessions in Philadelphia.

She was a United States delegate to the Pan-American Labor Conference in Santiago, Chile, in January, 1936, and was one of the two United States delegates to the ILO convention in Geneva in May, 1936, the other being John G. Winant, present Ambassador to Great Britain.

Miss Anderson Retires

Miss Anderson is an advocate of equal-opportunity and equal-pay principles for men and women workers, and has fought towards this end consistently during her 25 years in office.

Miss Miller formerly was New York State labor commissioner and prior to that headed the New York State division of women in industry and minimum wage. More recently she has been attached to the United States Embassy in London. She was a technical advisor to the United States delegation at the recent international labor conference in Philadelphia.

Miss Anderson is retiring after continuous Government service of 27 years, almost 25 of these as director of the women's bureau. Many regard her as the leading authority on women workers in this country. Now the dean among women in appointive positions in the Federal Government, she came to the United States alone from Sweden as a 16-year-old girl.

Dean Arthur Speaks Today At Convention

Dean Helen B. Arthur, Washington College of Law, only woman dean of a law school in the United States, will be the guest speaker at a luncheon in Hotel Claridge, in Atlantic City, today.

The luncheon has been arranged by the women members of the Pennsylvania Bar Association in honor of Mrs. William Clarke Mason, wife of the present president, and wives of past presidents of the association which will hold its forty-ninth annual convention there today through Saturday.

Miss M. Vashti Burr of the District and Pennsylvania Bar Association with offices in Harrisburg and Washington, will accompany Dean Arthur to Atlantic City. She will present Dean Arthur at the luncheon and take part in the meeting of the Tax Section. As chairman of the committee to cooperate with the Medical Societies in Pennsylvania, Miss Burr will make the committee's report to the convention.

2 Banks Join Auditors' Unit As Associates

In his annual report as chairman of the auditors section, District of Columbia Bankers Association, James C. Elgin, a partner in W. B. Hibbs & Co., last night announced two new associate member institutions in the section, Suburban National Bank and Citizens Bank of Takoma Park. The organization now has 21 regular and three associate members with 52 accredited representatives.

Mr. Elgin also announced that at request of Dr. Chester W. Holmes, assistant superintendent of public schools, a special committee from the section had audited the books of six high schools. This committee was headed by Mrs. Margaret S. McClure, auditor of City Bank.

Annual meeting of the section was at Wardman Park Hotel. A dinner preceded the business session.

Directors of the National Bank of Washington, meeting yesterday, declared the regular semiannual dividend of $3 per share payable on July 1, 1944, to shareholders of record on June 24, 1944. Transfer books will be closed from June 31 to July 1, 1944, both dates inclusive, it was announced.

Fox Suit Seen As Trade Name Protection Test

The Fox Fur Co., which operates six corporations, one of which is located in the District at 425 7th st. nw., was charged yesterday in a one-million-dollar New York Supreme Court action brought by I. J. Fox in New York with unfair competition and illegal appropriation of the Fox trade names and slogans.

The complaint states that a full-page advertisement had been inserted in a Washington newspaper, "identical in all respects" with an I. J. Fox ad in a New York newspaper.

Leon Labes, counsel for the plaintiff, said that, with no precedent in New York State law for the action, it was predicated on United States Supreme Court decisions. He said it would be a test case of the amount of protection national advertisers have on their trade names, but that the legal question involved was whether a State court could enjoin individuals who are residents of the State from action outside that State.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, June 21 (AP).—The pressure of a record wheat crop and prospects for heavy yields of all small grains was felt in the market today and all grain futures were lower in a bearish and quiet trade.
